INDIAN OCEAN—SEYCHELLES GROUP.

Non-existence of Mellow rock.

THE British Admiralty has given notice (No. 252 of 1892) that the Port Officer, pilots, and fishermen, resident on the Seychelles, are unanimously of opinion that Mellow rock, charted as lying about 10 miles north-eastward of Praslin island, and described as drying at low water, does not exist. This rock, the original authority for which is unknown, has therefore been expunged from the Admiralty charts.

Approximate position as heretofore given, lat. 4° 11¼′ S., long. 55° 51′ E.

(2) Non-existence of shoals north-east and east of Chimney rocks.

Also, that the positions of the two shoals (marked D) charted as lying about 1½ miles north-east and east of Chimney rocks respectively, were passed over by the Stork on two occasions, but no indication of shoal water was seen; the pilot also stated that no shoals other than Chimney and Renommée rocks exist in the immediate neighbourhood. These shoals therefore have also been removed from the charts.

Approximate position of Chimney rocks, lat. 4° 27¾′ S., long. 55° 52¼′ E.

SULU OR MINDORA SEA—PALAWAN ISLAND.

Dangerous shoal eastward of Ursula island.

NOTICE to Mariners No. 268 of 1892, issued by the British Admiralty, is republished :—

Information has been received through the Board of Trade that on 9th February 1892 the British barque Argyll was totally wrecked on a dangerous shoal lying eastward of Ursula island, south-east coast of Paláwan island :—

The position of this shoal (Argyll shoal), as determined by the Commander of the Spanish gun vessel Mariveles, is with Ursula island bearing N. 72° W., distant about 5 miles, or in approximately lat 8° 18½′ N., long. 117° 35′ E.

NOTE.—As this part of the Sulu sea is imperfectly surveyed, and many uncharted dangers may exist, Mariners should navigate in the locality with caution.

CHINA SEA—MACCLESFIELD BANK.

Existence of shoal spots.

THE British Admiralty has given notice (No. 269 of 1892) that a recent examination by Commander W. U. Moore, H. M. Surveying vessel Penguin, of the western rim of Macclesfield bank, has disclosed many spots shoaler than heretofore charted.

The general result of the survey, which embraced 95 miles of the western rim of the bank, shows that the average breadth of the rim is about 3 miles, and that the depths over it are 6 to 33 fathoms.

In the lagoon itself, the shoalest head, 5 fathoms was found.

Until publication of the full survey, the following spots should be noted :—

Cathay shoal, reported by the P. and O. Company's steamer Cathay (see Notice to Mariners, No. 497 of 1891), is 9 cables in length in a north and south direction, and 8 cables wide. On the shallowest part, in the centre, not less than 7 fathoms could be found. This shoal east is in lat 15° 54′ N., long. 113° 58½′ E.

Walker shoal, situated in the lagoon of the atoll, is circular in shape, and three-quarters of a mile in diameter. The shoalest spot, 5 fathoms in the centre, is in lat. 15° 55′ N., long 114° 28½′ E. The general depths over this shoal are 7 to 8 fathoms.

Oliver shoal, in lat. 16° 4½′ N., long 114° 29½′ E., was not examined in detail, but a depth of 6 fathoms was obtained on it. Shoaler water probably exists in the locality.

NOTE—Attention is called to notice to Mariners, No. 560 of 1891, in which vessels are cautioned not to cross Macclesfield bank, but to navigate "between Macclesfield bank and Bombay reef."

SULO ARCHIPELAGO—BORNEO—NORTH-EAST COAST.

Shoal eastward of Darvel peninsula.

THE British Admiralty has given notice (No. 272 of 1892) of the existence of a narrow coral shoal lying off the north shore of Darvel bay :—

This shoal (Howard shoal), about 8 cables long in an E.S.E. and W.N.W. direction, with a least depth of 14 feet on it at low water spring tides, lies with the west summit of Pulo Gaya bearing S. 13° E., and shoal point, Darvel peninsula, N. 81° W., distant 13 miles.

Commander Field places Howard shoal in lat. 4° 53′ 15″ N., long. 118° 41′ E., but it has been adapted to the imperfect outline of the surrounding objects on the charts, and placed in approximately lat. 4° 54′ 30″ N., long. 118° 40′ 30″ E.

VILLAGE CHAUKIDARI ACT, 1870, AMENDMENT BILL.

THE HON'BLE MR. COTTON presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to further amend the Village Chaukidari Act, 1870, and moved that the Report be taken into consideration in order to the settlement of the clauses of the Bill, and that the clauses of the Bill be considered in the form recommended by the Select Committee.

He said:—"The Committee have altered the Bill which was introduced into Council in certain respects, and it will therefore be more appropriate to consider the Bill as it has been amended by the Committee in preference to the Bill which was originally referred to them. With reference to the considerable number of amendments in the Bill, of which notice has been given, I think it will be more convenient to the Council if I do not occupy their time at present with any observations on the Report of the Select Committee, but reserve what I have to say to the time when the several amendments come before us for discussion; to leave, in fact, hon'ble members who have proposed amendments to move their amendments and to support them, and then to leave me, if necessary, to reply or make such observations as seem proper on each amendment."

The Motions were put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe moved that, for the words "District Magistrate," wheresoever they occur in the Bill, the words "Magistrate of the district" be substituted.

He said:—"The first amendment in my name is, so to speak, of a clerical character, yet not wholly without importance. I notice that the words 'District Magistrate' are used in the Bill as amended by the Select Committee, and in the Bill as it went before the Committee. No doubt the words 'District Magistrate' are defined in Act X of 1882, but inasmuch as this Bill is one to amend Act VI of 1870 which was passed before that Act, and is when passed to be read with Act VI, it appears to me desirable that the nomenclature of the Act we are amending, should be preserved. In that Act, the words 'Magistrate of the district' are used, and in that Act they are defined; and those who are cognisant with the difficulties which sometimes arise in the construction of Acts of the Legislature are fully alive to the great importance of retaining the same nomenclature in the amending Act. I therefore move that, for the words 'District Magistrate,' wheresoever they occur in the Bill, the words 'Magistrate of the district' be substituted."

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said:—"I need hardly, as representing the Select Committee, observe that we shall be most glad to be advised by the learned Advocate-General in a question of this nature, but I think it right to explain, for the information of the Council, that the expression 'District Magistrate' was designedly used in the draft Bill with reference to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 3 of Act X of 1882 lays down that, in all Acts passed previous to that Act, the words 'Magistrate of the district' shall be understood to mean the District Magistrate; and the term 'District Magistrate' is used throughout the Code of Criminal Procedure. Bengal Act VI of 1870 was one of the earlier Acts referred to in the Code of Criminal Procedure, and accordingly it has been the practice of this Council, and I apprehend also of the Council of the Government of India, when they refer to the Magistrate of the district to describe him as District Magistrate. But if the Advocate-General is of opinion that it is advisable, in order to avoid inconvenience, to use the words 'Magistrate of the district,' I do not think the Council will offer any objection to the proposal. But I should like to have his opinion on the point I have brought to the notice of the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe in reply said:—"There is no doubt, as pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton, that by the Criminal Procedure Code it is enacted that, the expression 'Magistrate of the district' shall, in all Acts previous thereto, be taken to mean 'District Magistrate.' But, for that very reason, I think that though no real difficulty need be apprehended that, it would be advisable to make the amendment I have proposed to prevent even the arising of a factitious difficulty."

The HON'BLE MR. COTTON said:—"There is no real objection, but I thought it right to explain why the words 'District Magistrate' were used."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE also moved that, sub-section (1) of section 2 be amended, and when amended stand as follows:—

'by an order in writing appoint not less than three, nor more than five, residents in any village or group of villages within the district of which he has charge to be the panchayat thereof.'

He said:—"The question involved in this question is this, whether there exists any good ground for reducing the possible number of the panchayat to one? In the Act which this Bill is to amend, the numbers are 'not less than three nor more than five.' I have looked through the report of the Police Committee on the conclusions of which in the main this Bill has been drafted, and have also endeavoured to make myself acquainted, as far as I could, with the opinions expressed upon the Bill since it has been circulated, to search for any reason or suggestion that the number should be so reduced as it is in the Bill as it stands at present, but I have been able to find none. Neither in that report, nor in those subsequently expressed opinions, are there any. I understand it is suggested that, there may be backward districts in which it might be difficult to obtain more than one person fitted to be a member of a panchayat. That is a position which does not appear to have been taken throughout the report, or in any subsequently expressed opinion. No doubt there may be such: but in looking at the Resolution of this Government, I find that among the recommendations requiring legislation are, special provisions for carrying on the duties of assessment and supervision in tea-gardens in Jalpaiguri and elsewhere, where the ordinary panchayats are not to be appointed. If there be necessity for legislation in such districts, it should be on the lines set out in this Resolution, that is, by way of special provisions to meet special wants in specially defined districts, and not by subjecting the general run of villages throughout Bengal to a state of things which is properly applicable only to certain specified districts in which there are certain very special circumstances distinguishing them, as the Resolution says, from places where the ordinary panchayats can be appointed. But there appears to me no reason given why, save in such special districts, there should not be at least three members of a panchayat, the lowest number that is prescribed by the present law. As far as the maximum limit is concerned, I am at one with the conclusion arrived at by the Select Committee.

"The position of affairs then is this that, if in any case only one person is appointed to exercise the duties of the panchayat, firstly provision will have to be made for cases of sickness or unavoidable absence from the village or the like; and, secondly, as there are, I believe, in almost every village in Bengal rival parties amongst the villagers, it appears to me that if the Council were to adopt the possible limit of one, in many villages there might come to pass that there will be but one so selected, who would probably represent simply one faction in the village, would undoubtedly proceed to deal favourably with those who are on his own side, and with as much harshness as he can with those on the other side. Further, by having more than one person to decide on any particular matter of assessment or other duty within the province of the panchayat, some sort of controlling influence will be exercised. If there be at least three members appointed, such evils would, it seems to me, be minimised to a great extent, if not entirely removed.

"But there is another circumstance, which I think may induce hon'ble members to dismiss from their minds the suggested difficulty of being able to get three fit men to serve on the panchayat. In this Bill, as now drafted, power is given to the Magistrate to include more than one village for the purposes of the Act, and to form a group of villages, and to have a panchayat, either for a single village or a group of villages. If that be so, the difficulty which, as I understand, has suggested itself to the minds of some hon'ble members falls to the ground. It can hardly be supposed that in any group of villages, such as the Magistrate in the exercise of his discretion and the power conferred upon him by law may see fit to group together, there cannot be found three proper persons."

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said:—"The provision in the Bill to which the learned Advocate-General takes exception was, as he surmises, deliberately introduced with primary reference to the districts of Jalpaiguri, Darjeeling, and, I may say, Chittagong, where there are tea-gardens and coolies in considerable numbers clustered together around the factory, constituting, in reality, villages, but yet not such villages as fall within the definition of that term under the existing law. And the question having been raised more than once whether the existing law applies to such places, the Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) expressed his opinion that it did not; and in consequence, the Chaukidari Act has not been extended to such places. It was thought advisable in any new legislation to provide for this difficulty, and in the first draft of the Bill special sections were inserted which would meet the case of such tea-gardens. But afterwards, on further consideration, it was thought that the difficulty might be obviated without resorting to special provisions for the purpose, but by a change of the present law to the form it has assumed in the Bill now before the Council, namely, that the District Magistrate may appoint one or more, but not more than five persons to be the panchayat.

"It is contemplated that in such cases as those to which I have referred, the District Magistrate will be in a position to appoint the resident planter it may be, or if there is objection to such a course, the head Babu of his establishment, or, at all events, appoint a single officer who should discharge the duties of the panchayat under the Act. This is the primary explanation of the modification of the law now before you. When the Bill was circulated to local officers, it was brought to notice by more than one Magistrate, and especially by the late Mr. Ashutosh Gupta, a very able and promising young Civilian, whose loss the Government has much reason to deplore, that a reduction in the number of the panchayat rendering it possible to appoint one person would prove very useful in the case of collieries where the circumstances are similar to those of tea-gardens; and I may add that it would also, in my judgment, prove convenient in the case of indigo factories occasionally. In Lower Bengal, particularly, it is often the case that around factories or the head-quarters of collieries a very large number of coolies, boonahs, or of whatever caste they may be, congregate and form large villages, from amongst whom there is no one who can properly be appointed a panchayat—no one who could be selected but the employer of the labourer or some one on his establishment; and it is just as necessary to appoint the manager of the colliery or factory, or his head assistant, as to appoint the manager in a tea-garden or his head assistant in the tea districts of Jalpaiguri, Darjeeling and Chittagong. There are, therefore, a very considerable number of cases in which it would be extremely inconvenient if this provision of the Bill is exercised and the minimum number of the panchayat is fixed at three. The object of the change is primarily to meet these cases.

"But I must add that quite independently of these special cases, there are tracts to be found in Bengal where it will be found to be very difficult to appoint a panchayat of even so many as three persons. I am quite sure that in every district where it can be done, full panchayats will be appointed. It is a great advantage for purposes of administration to appoint at least three men to perform the duties of panchayat. The burden imposed upon the panchayat of assessing and collecting the tax is considerable, and a single villager, as villages are now constituted in Bengal, will no doubt often find it an excessive burden. The Magistrates would, of their own accord, often appoint as a rule three men, or it may be five, to be members of a panchayat. But there are places where this cannot be done, backward tracts, very special areas, isolated villages, which it is impossible to amalgamate with other villages without great administrative inconvenience—very small hamlets it may be, two or three miles apart, as is the case in some parts of Eastern Bengal. In such places, it will be convenient to appoint a single man as the village panchayat. Therefore, I think, it is desirable that this provision should be maintained in the Bill; not only to meet the special cases with reference to which the alteration in the Act has been specially proposed, but also to meet the ordinary case of a Bengal village where it has been found impossible or inconvenient to appoint more than a single member a panchayat. I hope, therefore, the Council will allow this provision to remain as it is in the Bill which has been presented by the Select Committee."

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder said:—"As the next amendment on the agenda of which I have given notice is precisely the same as the present one of my hon'ble friend, the Advocate-General, I wish to say a few words in support of his motion. It seems to me that the word 'panchayat' in itself conveys an idea of plurality. It will therefore be a contradiction in terms to use the word to designate a panchayat consisting of one member. If the number is sought to be reduced to one, I think the word had better be taken out of the Act altogether, and the word 'assessor' or 'tax-collector' substituted; just as may be agreed upon. It is said that, in some villages there is a paucity of fit men, and on that ground it is expedient to reduce the number of the panchayat to one; but in reply to that I say, as has been pointed out by the Advocate-General, that the remedy will be in the hands of the District Magistrate. Under section 3 he will have the right, where he finds a paucity of men fit to act on the panchayat, to group together as many villages as will supply the required number of men. The Act has to be worked in rural tracts of the country, where one would expect to find only men of the ordinary calibre; in that case a collective body of such men would always discharge their duties more efficiently and satisfactorily than if such duties had to be performed by one single individual. They would have the advantage of consulting together, and, what is more, a body of men would be less likely to abuse their power than a single individual. Then, it is said that in villages where there are tea-gardens, indigo plantations, or collieries, it will be more convenient to have the manager or his assistant appointed the sole member of the panchayat. That may be so; but considering the small number of villages in this country in which there are such tea-gardens, &c., compared with the very large number of villages in which this Act will have to be worked, it will not be worth while to legalise what would be an absurdity in language on the face of it, and inconsistent with the very idea of the thing itself. I therefore support the motion of the Advocate-General."

The Hon'ble Mr. Allen said:—"When Act VI of 1870 was passed, it fell to my lot to be one of the first Magistrates called upon to introduce the Act. I was at the time District Magistrate of Birbhum. I have, therefore, what probably no other member of this Council has, actual experience of the difficulty of procuring even three men to act on the panchayat. I suppose no person will, for a moment, deny that the arguments used both by the Advocate-General and by the last speaker are perfectly sound, and they must commend themselves to every one, namely, that, if possible, a panchayat of three persons is to be preferred to a single man; but unfortunately villages there are, besides the special tea districts, where that is not possible, and therefore of necessity the application of the Act would be impossible everywhere. The result will be simply that the Act will not be operative in a vast number of villages even in some of the regular districts of Bengal, such as Birbhum. In Birbhum, there is a large village less than five miles from the sadar station, containing more than 100 houses, and being most anxious to introduce the Act there, I could not find three men who could be trusted or who had sufficient education to be appointed panchayat. The inhabitants are all peasants, palki bearers and weavers. In this one district of Birbhum, there were at the time something like 3,000 villages, and I am confident that if a panchayat of three members is essential to the introduction of the Act, more than 2,000 of those villages will never come under it at all. Respectable men do not live in rural villages; in many districts the only occupiers are the peasantry and low-class men who would not undertake the duties, and could not be trusted to do so. It would therefore be best to provide that, wherever three fit persons can be found that should be the minimum number, but by insisting on a minimum of three in all cases, the Act will be inoperative in fully half the villages in a number of ordinary regulation districts in Bengal. If the Council is prepared to say that it shall be so, well and good, but they should know that this will be the result. The HON'BLE BABU GONESH CHUNDER CHUNDER thinks it a grammatical absurdity to call a single man a panchayat, but I have a precedent, the authority of which he must recognize. In yesterday's Englishman, there is a report of a case decided in the High Court on appeal from the district of Backergunge, and the Judges, in their decision, speaking of a witness said:—'We are not inclined to put much faith on any of the witnesses. The first is a panchayat, and was formerly a servant in the family.' I think that is a precedent for using the word panchayat to describe a single person, and it also throws light upon the status which a panchayat occupies—'a servant of the family'—not a servant for collecting rent or connected with the land—a domestic servant."

The HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE said:—"I do not myself place very much stress on the argument that, a single person cannot properly be said to come within the meaning of 'panchayat', though I must say the HON'BLE BABU GONESH CHUNDER CHUNDER has pointed out some difficulty arising in that matter. But apart from that, and dealing with the objections placed before the Council by the HON'BLE MR. COTTON, I think they may be easily disposed of. There are no cumbrous provisions necessary to be added to this Bill. All that is required to meet those objections may be done by the introduction of a short clause of the simple nature I had the honour to indicate, I thought with sufficient clearness, to the hon'ble member of the Council before I sat down. And, if I have the President's permission to introduce it at this stage without notice, I am prepared to indicate to the Council how, as it seems to me, that which is regarded as an insuperable difficulty, can be got over in the most simple manner. With this object, I ask the President's consent to move that, at the end of sub-section (1) of section 2, the following proviso be added:—

'Provided also that the Local Government shall be entitled to prescribe that in certain specified local areas to be notified in the official gazette, the number of persons to be appointed to discharge the duties of a panchayat may be reduced to one.'

The HON'BLE THE PRESIDENT said:—"As no Member is likely to object to the introduction of the proposed clause even at this late stage, I shall thank the hon'ble member for introducing it."

The HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE continued:—"Having obtained Your Honour's permission to propose that clause, I have only to say that the clause speaks for itself and gets rid of the difficulty the HON'BLE MR. COTTON has felt. It will retain the existing number of the panchayat in ordinary districts; and in those areas which are special in their character, where it may be necessary to appoint a more limited number, it will enable the Local Government, in the exercise of its discretion, to reduce the number to one. I therefore move this further amendment."

The HON'BLE MR. COTTON said:—"I must say I think this amendment will cause some little embarrassment in its practical operation. It comes to me unexpectedly, and it is difficult to express an opinion on the spur of the moment as to how it will actually work. But I shall not be surprised if a considerable number of applications are made to the Government to exercise its powers under this provision. And unquestionably it will be embarrassing to the Government to have its time taken up by matters of this sort, which would be well left to the district officers. Separate investigation will have to be made in every case, and it will give rise to trouble to the Local Government without, I think, much advantage. There is also some objection to notifying such extremely small local matters in the official gazette which is circulated to all parts of the province. It is only desirable to notify in the official gazette matters of general public importance, not matters of extremely local and special significance. I think the Council will be better advised if it were to leave to the Local Government and to its district officers to appoint under this section, as undoubtedly would be done wherever it can be done, three or more members of the panchayat. There is not the smallest wish on the part of local officers to appoint a single man only if they can help it.

I can say with confidence that, Magistrates would prefer a panchayat of three or five. The old Act provided for a panchayat of three or five, but how was the difficulty overcome? Simply by panchayats not being appointed, and thus, although the number is now three or five, the work is in the vast majority of cases done by a single man owing to the exigencies of the situation. The number of men available in villages in the mufassal is not sufficiently large. You are compelled to go either, as the Hon'ble Mr. Allen has just pointed out, to the servants of private individuals to make up your panchayat, which is very objectionable, or to have no panchayat at all. The constitution of panchayats is extremely bad owing to the difficulty of obtaining fit men. I think the Council might leave it with the Local Government to arrange with the local officers what the number of the panchayat should be, and I hope, therefore, the proposed amendment will not be passed."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe said:—"The hon'ble member has misconstrued my amendment. It does not require a notification in each particular panchayat's case, but only in respect of each specified local area."

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said:—"That may be the intention, but it seems to me that the terms of the amendment require a notification in each case."

The Hon'ble the President said:—"My own feeling on this question is that, on the whole, I prefer the section as it stands, on account of the difficulties which have been mentioned in the Police Committee's report as to the cases of tea-garden coolies and so forth, where it is practically impossible to appoint more than one person, and also on account of the difficulties which the Hon'ble Mr. Allen has forcibly brought forward, although it must be admitted that those difficulties have not been represented in the correspondence or the evidence given before the Police Commission as involving any serious obstacle. At the same time, I believe that the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe, governed by the subsequent amendment which he has also brought forward, will attain the same result. The only objection I see to it is, that it will give a certain amount of trouble to the Secretariat in issuing notifications. But I distinctly understand that, the terms of the amendment necessitate simply a notification of this kind, that 'in thána so and so of such a district, or in the villages hereunder mentioned, the number of the panchayat shall only be one.' It is not necessary, as I take it, that there should be a notification as to a particular panchayat; but that a certain local area, or certain villages falling within the same category, may be placed in a schedule of villages where only one person can be found suitable to exercise the duties of a panchayat. The question is one which I can safely leave to the members of the Council to decide by their votes, without indicating any expression of the views of the Government, or any strong wish on my part that it should be decided in one way or the other."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe's motion that, sub-section (1) of section 2 be amended, was then put to the vote and carried.

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe's motion that, a new proviso be added to the end of sub-section (1) of section 2, was also put to the vote and carried.

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder, by leave, withdrew the motion of which he had given notice that, in sub-section (1) of section 2, the words 'one or more residents, but not more than five,' after the word 'appoint' be struck out, and instead thereof, the words 'not less than three nor more than five residents' be substituted.

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder said:—"If the Hon'ble Mr. Risley will alter the amendment of which he has given notice, to add a sub-section to section 2, by incorporating in it the amendment which has just been adopted on the motion of the Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe, I will withdraw the amendment of which I have given notice."

The Hon'ble Mr. Risley having signified his willingness to incorporate the amendment—

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder, by leave, withdrew the motion of which he had given notice that, the following sub-section be added before the proviso in section 2:—

'or (2) he may, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, direct that the adult male rate-paying residents of any village or group of villages shall elect, subject to any conditions and in any manner and according to any rules that the Local Government may, by notification published in the official Gazette, see fit to direct, not less than three nor more than five residents to be the panchayat thereof subject to his approval; and the Magistrate shall, if he approves of the persons so elected, appoint such persons to be the panchayat of such village or group of villages, and shall if he disapprove of any person so elected for reasons to be recorded by him in writing, appoint a fit and proper resident to be a member of the panchayat of such village or group of villages, in the place of the person not approved of by him as aforesaid.'

[The Hon'ble Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar enquired if, in moving his amendment the Hon'ble Mr. Risley would also agree to substitute the word 'elect' for 'select,' so as to make his amendment correspond in every respect with the amendment of which the Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder had given notice?]

The Hon'ble Mr. Risley said:—"I have been asked whether, in moving the next amendment, I will not only adopt the amendment which has just been carried on the motion of the Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe, namely, to substitute the words 'not less than three nor more than five residents to be the panchayat thereof' for the words 'a person or a specified number of persons not more than five to be the panchayat or members of the panchayat for such village' in the amendment of which I have given notice; but whether I will also agree to change the word 'select' in my amendment for the word 'elect' in the amendment of the Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder? In reply to the hon'ble member's question, I would say that, I prefer to retain the word 'select,' and I shall have the opportunity of explaining the reasons which induce me to do so. I will, in the first instance, ask the permission of Your Honour to introduce the words incorporated in the Bill on the motion which has just been passed."

The Hon'ble the President having signified his permission—

The Hon'ble Mr. Risley moved that the following sub-section be added after the words 'may hereafter be extended' in section 2:—

'or (2) he may, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, direct that the adult male rate-paying residents of any village or group of villages shall select, according to any rules that may be prescribed by the Local Government and published in the official Gazette, not less than three nor more than five residents of the village or group of villages to be the panchayat thereof; and if he approves of the person or persons so selected, he shall appoint such person or persons to be the panchayat or members of the panchayat in such village; but if the District Magistrate shall not approve of any person so selected, he shall, for reasons to be recorded by him in writing, appoint a fit and proper person to be the panchayat or a member of the panchayat in such village in the place of any person not approved of by him as aforesaid:

'Provided that no panchayat shall be appointed in any place to which the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, has been, or may hereafter be, extended.'

He said:—"In moving this amendment I may refer briefly to the history of the proposal that the chaukidari panchayat should be selected by the villagers themselves. That history is comparatively a short and simple one. In the report of the Police Committee (paragraph 41) they refer to Act VI (B.C.) of 1870, and say:—

'It was apparently thought (when that Act was framed) that the Magistrate of the district would be able by his local knowledge to select fit and proper persons. It seems also to have been thought that any villager was fit to be a member of a panchayat, and might be trusted to assess his fellow-villagers justly, to collect the rate, to decide how many chaukidars were required, and to see that they did their duty. Both of these are assumptions which were not justified by subsequent events. Mr. Monro's Committee, it will be remembered, found that panchayats had not been judiciously selected, and attributed this in a great measure to the selection having been left to the police. By Act I of 1886, section 3 of Act VI was consequently amended in such a way as would, it was believed, lead to a more careful selection of panchayats. The Magistrate who visits the village is directed to enquire from the villagers who are in their opinion the fittest persons to be members of the panchayat.'

Consequently it will be seen that Act VI of 1870, as amended by Act I of 1886, contains within itself something closely approaching to the principle which the present amendment seeks to introduce. In commenting on sub-section (2) of section 2 of the draft Bill, the Commissioner of Rajshahi expresses himself in terms implying his belief that, the present law does in fact virtually provide for selection. To put the matter plainly, Mr. Nolan appears to be of opinion that, any Magistrate may go into a village and order the villagers to select their panchayat, and the conclusion he draws from that is adverse on the whole to the sub-section. He says that, sub-section (2) as it stood in the draft Bill has no force or validity one way or the other, and that it really leaves the matter where it was. I do not agree in this criticism. There seems to me to be all the difference in the world between a section which lays down a definite mode of procedure and provides for effect being given to it by a definite set of rules, and a section which leaves every thing to discretion, and does not suggest the mode in which that discretion should be exercised. Sub-section (2), which reproduces in a slightly modified form the corresponding section of the original Bill, lays down that, selection should be made by the villagers subject to rules to be sanctioned by the Government and notified in the official gazette. It suggests a procedure and indicates a principle which, it is hoped, may turn out eventually to be self-working. It is interesting to note that, the views of the Police Committee on the subject of the panchayat underwent some modification during their deliberations. At the meeting held on the 7th January, 1891, I find the President moved that the following powers:—'the allotment of chaukidars, fixing the pay of chaukidars, appointment of chaukidars, dismissal of chaukidars—should be vested in the District Superintendent of Police, subject to the control of the Magistrate, and that the law be amended accordingly.' Obviously, the adoption of this proposal would have left the panchayat very little to do, and would, in fact, have been hardly compatible with the maintenance of the panchayat at all. But the Committee saw reason to change their minds on this point, and on the 12th of January, they considered a note by myself on the selection of the panchayat, and adopted it as the basis of their recommendations. Their recommendations will be found in paragraph 43 of the report. It is there stated briefly and plainly:—

'We would allow all adult male owners or occupiers of houses in a village to vote for members of the panchayat, and the names of those thus elected should be submitted to the Magistrate for confirmation. Before issuing orders, the Magistrate would make such enquiries as he might think necessary, and the insertion of the condition of respectability in the law would enable him to reject any disreputable or low caste person who was not fit in his opinion to hold the post. We are unable to recommend that ability to read and write should be indispensable qualifications, both because, as mentioned above, in many parts of the country villagers so qualified are not procurable, and because in many cases illiterate men are not only influential, but sensible and practical men of business. At the same time, where possible, men who can read and write should, we think, be appointed.'

"The section which was struck out from the Bill by the Select Committee, and which is now under consideration, substantially gives effect to the proposals of the Police Committee. It gives effect to them subject to certain precautionary limitations, the necessity of which is obvious enough. What the Committee say about respectability, about empowering the Magistrate to reject low caste men, about the ability to read and write not being an indispensable qualification, and so forth, will obviously be included either in the rules which it is proposed the Government shall frame to regulate the working of the system, or in executive orders issued for the guidance of Magistrates.

"Let us now consider how these proposals have been received. We have, among the papers before the Council, opinions from officials and from representative bodies and associations. I find that as many as ten Associations have submitted opinions on the Bill and have referred to this clause. All of these, with the single exception of the Central National Muhammadan Association, are in favour of the elective clause. Some of them suggest that, its terms should be altered in some, not very material, particulars. Thus the Noakhali Association would require the Magistrate's proceedings, when he disapproves of an election, to be submitted for the confirmation of the Commissioner. The Barisál People's Association suggest that, villages which elect Local Boards should be declared competent to elect panchayats.

The Murshidabad and Rajshahi Associations would make election universal, and eliminate the Magistrate altogether. The other Associations approve generally. The Central Muhammadan Association disapprove of this principle of election, but it is apparent from their reference to the working of the elective principle, that they have in their mind some mode of election differing materially from that which in actual practice the sub-section would introduce. They speak of election as it prevails in municipal towns, and it would seem from the tone of their remarks that they are not altogether free from misgivings as to the success of the elective system in municipalities. But whatever may be the actual working details of the method of election or selection, which will be adopted for the panchayat, it is certain that it will differ in many important particulars from the system of election obtaining in municipalities.

"Turning to the opinions of the Commissioners of Divisions, five of them appear to be on the whole in favor of the section. Mr. Toynbee, Commissioner of Orissa, passes it over in silence, and it may be assumed that he and his district officers accept it. It is not the manner of district officers to let opportunities slip in that fashion. Mr. Lyall, Commissioner of Patna, apparently approves of the provision, but presumes that it is not intended that the sanction of the Local Government shall be necessary for each village. Of course, it is obvious that it would not be required for such minute areas. Mr. Lyall also remarks that, it is a question whether the sanction of the Commissioner should not be sufficient. Mr. Grimley, Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, makes no mention of the section, and therefore presumably approves of it. Mr. Beames, who was President of the Police Committee, approves of the section. [MR. COTTON:—'I am not aware that Mr. Beames approves: will you read his remarks?'] Mr. Beames says:—'I have the honour to state that as the Bill now circulated embodies the proposals of the Police Committee, of which I had the honour to be President, I naturally agree to it, and have no objection to raise.' Those words seem to me to leave little doubt as to Mr. Beames's opinion on this subject.

"Mr. Power, Commissioner of Burdwan, gives what may be called a qualified assent to the provision. He says:—'I see no objection to the principle of election, safeguarded by the restrictions proposed; these, however, are absolutely essential, for it would, in my opinion, be a fatal mistake to deliver over rural Bengal to the tyranny of majorities.'

"Mr. Quinn, Commissioner of Bhágalpur, would strike out this clause, as elections are, in his opinion, entirely out of place in villages. He says:—'The Magistrate should, as far as possible, ascertain and consider the wishes and sentiments of the residents in selecting the panchayat, and executive rules may be laid down with a view to secure this object, but this is quite a different matter from directing the holding of an election, a function for which the rural population are quite unfitted.'

"Mr. Oldham, Commissioner of Chittagong, is on the whole opposed to the section, but seems to have no a priori objection to its principle. He says:—

'I hope that the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton's speech in Council will have disposed of the subject proposed to be provided for by clause (2) of draft section 2. The proposal conflicts with the proposed beginning to change the character of the village police made by the constitution of a district fund, even though it is only to be a reward fund at first, and even though, as long as each chaukidar is subscribed for by the village, and in the village, he must continue to be more or less a village servant. But the provision in the first part of draft clause (2) to section 2 is so contingent, and so restricted, and can be so neutralized, that I think it would be better in a measure like the draft, which cannot by its nature enact very exact details, to omit this part of the clause, and to add in its place to clause (1) the words 'and in so doing may consult the rate-paying inhabitants of the village.'

"That, no doubt, can hardly be described as a definite and clean cut opinion, but I submit that it is not positively adverse to selection by the villagers as a mode of appointing the panchayat.

"Lastly, Mr. Jenkins, Officiating Commissioner of Dacca, gives his own opinion and the opinions of the district officers. He writes:—

'The Magistrate of Mymensingh thinks that the provision regarding election is comparatively harmless. The Magistrate of Faridpur, however, is opposed to it. He apprehends that this would only lead to party faction and disputes in villages. It would be easy, he reports, for interested persons to get up a large number of applications for election, and the Magistrate, in refusing them, would be made to pose in the eyes of a section of the public as a constant enemy to the cause of progress. This would not make administration more easy. The office of panchayat has never been popular. No respectable person has ever held it in high esteem, and it is unlikely that the importance of the appointment would be enhanced in the eyes of respectable persons by making it dependent on the suffrages of their raiyats. I agree with Mr. Growse in thinking that the election of panchayat is neither necessary nor desirable; on the contrary, it will lead to difficulties and complications, and give considerable trouble to the executive authorities, without securing any corresponding advantage.'

"The Magistrate of Mymensingh referred to in this extract, is, Mr. Phillips. I think no one will suspect Mr. Phillips of a tendency to neglect the interests of the executive. If he considers the clause harmless, it must be harmless indeed. I have already referred to the opinion of Mr. Nolan, Commissioner of Rajshahi, and I have passed in review the opinions of the several Associations, 9 out of 10 being in favour of the sub-section, and the Muhammadan Association opposing it under a misapprehension of the kind of election likely to take place, and looking upon it as an election of the sort with which we are familiar in municipalities. With reference to the opinions of Commissioners of Divisions, I submit, without straining any point at all, that it can be fairly claimed that five of them are out-and-out in favour of the section and four are opposed to it. At the same time, it is clear from the opinions that those who are against the proposal oppose it from a mistaken view of its true character. The kind of election they are thinking of, differs toto cœlo from the kind of election which the section contemplates, and I believe if these gentlemen could hear my explanation of its intention and probable working, I should have most of them on my side.

"Now, let us take the question on its merits. People say that villagers in this country are very ignorant and stupid people; that they are so foolish that they cannot be trusted to do anything for themselves; that everything must be done for them; that there must be continual special intervention in order that their affairs may be properly regulated. I must say that that is by no means my experience. For a good many years I have been endeavouring to find out something about the customs and religions and usages of the inhabitants in rural villages in Bengal, and in order to get at the views of the people I found it necessary to go into villages myself, to see a great deal of village life, and further I found it necessary in these visits to dissociate myself from the regular police, to take with me no chaprási or policeman or any subordinate official. I found in practice that the villagers are not apt to be communicative when you have a police officer with you. And I must say that within the range of their knowledge—they have their limitations, like all of us—the villagers in this part of the country are an extremely shrewd and intelligent set of people. If there is any matter of village business you want to know about, you will find as a rule that the matter will be very clearly explained, and that every one understands all about it. The explanation will not necessarily be absolutely true, but that is not relevant to the present question. The question is, whether the people are intelligent enough to be able to exercise properly the power proposed to be given to them. Speaking for myself, I think they are certainly as intelligent as the average English peasant, and there is nothing they are more conversant with than the very matters with which this Bill is concerned. These matters are very simple and come within the range of the average villager's every-day experience. The election of panchayats for the purpose of disposing of what may be called communal business is going on every day all over the country at the present moment among castes of all sorts, and the various social groups into which they are divided. Every one of these groups has a governing body known as a panchayat or by some similar name, and to these bodies are entrusted not only such social functions as interdicting a man from the right of smoking or drinking water with his fellow-castemen, cutting off his hooka and his pani, but the administration of a large body of customary law. Among the large section of the population which is as yet untouched by the great codes of Hindu law, all social, domestic and civil relations are regulated by unwritten customary law, administered by panchayats. Besides questions of property, this law deals with matters connected with marriage, the re-marriage of widows and the practice of divorce, which is extensively practised in certain social strata. There is no difficulty in finding out what the body is that does this work, and I have no hesitation in saying that it is very effectively done. If, then, these comparatively complicated matters can be dealt with as they are by elective panchayats, and if the people are so familiar with the idea of an elective panchayat, I cannot see what difficulty there can be in introducing into villages, as proposed in this section, the system of panchayats appointed by selection.

"In a matter of such importance, I do not wish to rely solely on the somewhat special experience which I have acquired in special researches, but I will put the case merely from the point of view of a district officer who has gone into a village to settle a dispute. The experience is a familiar one. On arriving at the spot you find a mob of people all talking at the same time; you tell them they must nominate somebody to represent the different parties to the dispute, and that you will discuss the matter with them. It has happened to me repeatedly to go into villages under these circumstances, and I have even gone so far as to ask the villagers to appoint a panchayat or arbitrators, and after consideration and discussion they have done so, and the matter has been settled. I have seen questions of a much more difficult and complicated character than the comparatively simple one of appointing a panchayat settled in this way—questions of rates of rent affecting whole estates; the villagers have nominated their representatives, have discussed the matter with myself, and the matter has been settled. In one of these cases a large European firm of zamindars was interested. In all of them I found virtually no difficulty in getting a thoroughly intelligent and reasonable opinion out of the representatives selected by the villagers themselves. I may add, that they did not accept without question either my proposals or those of the zamindar, but they put forward well-considered counter-proposals of their own. I do not now mention these proceedings for the first time. They are already on record, and are referred to with approval in a report by the Government of Bengal on one of the later forms of the Bengal Tenancy Bill submitted to the Government of India towards the end of 1884. This report contains a description of the procedure adopted by me of holding what may be described as village conferences, and mentions it as a procedure which may be properly resorted to where serious rent disputes prevail.

"Now if you can get the people to discuss burning, difficult, complicated questions like that, there can be no difficulty in getting them to settle who are the most fit persons to do certain very simple acts, and look after certain very simple business. But it is said—suppose it is conceded that villagers can do this, then the question arises will they do it? Doubtless this change like many other changes will not be introduced with a rush; the elective system will not extend like flame all over the country. It will come in gradually, and I think it desirable that it should not be hurried. But when the system is once started it will tend to spread. My reason for thinking so is, that the people are interested in the principle of election; they will see which way their interest lies; that if they select a suitable panchayat it will save them a great deal of trouble; but if they select an unsuitable panchayat, the police will interfere; the sub-inspector, the head-constable and the constables will come into the village; there will be inquiry and explanation, and the result will be that every one will be put to a great deal of trouble and annoyance. I imagine that this will be a sufficient inducement for them to nominate a reasonable panchayat.

"I have thought over this carefully, and have considered what are the sort of things likely to happen in a village, and what modes of miscarriage are possible. It is no doubt conceivable that, in isolated cases the people may act maliciously and may seek to nullify the whole thing. To take an extreme case: they might appoint the village idiot, the village leper, and the village cripple to form the panchayat. It is not at all likely that they would do so, but if they did, no harm would be done. As soon as the Magistrate heard of their folly he would intervene and put things straight. He would say 'this panchayat is not a workable body', and thereupon he would proceed to nominate a reasonable body of men. Then there is the case referred to by the Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder that, in many villages there is a good deal of party spirit, and a good deal of dala-dali going on. Here, again, if a panchayat can be got to represent the various parties, there will be no reason to interfere; but if a workable panchayat cannot be got, things will come to a dead-lock, and the Magistrate will interfere, and will either appoint a panchayat from among the strongest party, or do what he thinks best. Then, there is a third case, where a bonâ fide mistake is made owing to the people failing to elect in time, or not electing the proper number; and in this case also, the Magistrate has nothing whatever to do but to intervene and appoint a panchayat.

"Lastly, I wish to explain one point in regard to which both in the official and non-official opinions there is very considerable misapprehension, namely, that the kind of election which the section contemplates is not the kind of election which many who have given their opinions have had in their minds. They have conjured up an entirely imaginary picture of a Bengal rustic village in the throes of a contested election, and have pictured to themselves canvassers and polling booths, elaborate provisions for recording the numbers of votes, declaring the majority and the minority, and all the paraphernalia of municipal elections. That, I need hardly say, is a complete mistake; and in order to guard against such mistakes in drafting the sub-section I now move, I use the word 'select' instead of 'elect.'

"In giving legislative sanction to an indigenous oriental institution like the panchayat, it seems above all things desirable to avoid words which connote European ideas and practice. If you use the word 'elect' you will import into the section a number of conceptions which will answer very well in modern Europe, but certainly will not work in villages here. The fact is, there are two modes of election known to history. One is the primitive ancient mode which we read of in Greek literature, and I believe also in early Sanscrit literature—the mode by which primitive tribes and races all the world over have elected their popular assemblies. It is the mode by which the panchayat is elected in castes in the present day. I have made very careful enquiries on this point, and I am convinced that, the method in which the panchayat is elected cannot be expressed in terms of European political phraseology. The people get together and they talk, and eventually an opinion emerges from their talk which is the opinion of all of them. There is no majority, for they are unanimous; there is no minority, for the minority has been talked over and casts in its lot with the majority. The process can only be described as selection by acclamation, in the way, the earliest Greek and German popular bodies were selected, the oldest mode of election in the world, which still survives in rural villages in this country where we have so many survivals. That being so, it is an entire misapprehension of the purpose of this section to say that, its provisions will be too elaborate. The people use this kind of election every day, and there is no reason why a village panchayat should not be selected in the same way as a caste panchayat.

"I submit, then, that the introduction of this section will save a great deal of trouble all round. It will save the villagers from being harassed by the police. It will spare a great deal of work to district officers. It will give them a certain amount of work at first, but it will be easy and interesting work; and when the system is once understood in large areas, it will spread of itself from one village to another, and will afford a self-working system for the appointing of panchayats. That is what we want—a self-working system. It seems to me to be the highest art of legislation to devise automatic methods; not to arrange matters so as to require constant intervention and tinkering, but to make things make themselves. That, I believe, this provision will do."

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said:—"As implied in the remarks I made when introducing this amending Act into Council, I am opposed to the principle of the election of the panchayat, and to the amendment now put forward by the Hon'ble Mr Risley, I must give my most uncompromising and unqualified opposition. I cannot imagine any principle more injurious to the successful working of the administration, if accepted, than the principle which the hon'ble member has been expounding to you. And I must say, I am surprised to see the use he has made in supporting his argument of the official opinions expressed on this proposal. As a rule, the local officers consulted have not referred to this provision of the Bill at all. No doubt they have observed the remarks I made in my speech when introducing this Bill, which implied distinctly that the Government were not in favour of the provision, and would be glad if it fell through. They have therefore been silent on the subject. My hon'ble friend thinks silence means approval, but in point of fact there is not a single Commissioner (except

Mr. Power) who gives his approval to the measure now proposed; nor am I able to find that any District Magistrate gives it his approval. One or two do not strongly object to it, but I am bound to say that it is advocated by none. I do admit that the Associations consulted do generally support the attitude taken up by the HON'BLE MR. RISLEY, and I observe that it suits his convenience, for the purposes of his argument, to lay great stress on their opinions on this occasion. His attitude is very different when dealing with Associations of this kind when opposing opinions of his own. However, I do admit that the opinions of these Associations are entitled to certain weight, and I am also far from denying that considerable weight should freely be given to opinions expressed in the Press of Bengal on this subject. I have read a vast mass of literature on this subject in the Native Press during the last three months, and I am bound to say that the general opinion has been extremely adverse to myself individually, and is very strongly in favour of the proposal which the HON'BLE MR. RISLEY now advocates. Now I am the last man to deny the importance of this criticism, and I think there is hardly an article on the subject which I have not read and considered. Although I do not agree with, and have not been convinced by what I have read, yet I do not in the smallest degree resent the attacks on me. I think, however, I may take some exception to the opinion given by the British Indian Association, which refers particularly to my want of sympathy with the system of election, and then because I object to democratising Bengal villages, proceeds to charge me with antagonism to liberal institutions generally. Criticism of this kind goes rather farther than I am willing to accept without protest.

"What I wish to persuade the Council is, that the extension of democratic institutions to Bengal villages is thoroughly unsound and opposed to the traditions and the best interests of the country. And first I will treat the matter from the most general point of view possible. The election of executive authorities at all in any capacity is open to objection. Your executive authorities ought not to be elected. When I was a young man, the name of John Stuart Mill was held in high reverence, and he was acknowledged as an undisputed authority in all matters relating to representative government. I do not know whether other thinkers have arisen of recent years whose views have put those of John Stuart Mill in the shade. But assuming, as I am perhaps justified in doing, that the authority of Mill is as great now as it was 25 or 30 years ago, I will read a very brief extract from his valuable work on representative government bearing on this question of election. He said:—

'A most important principle of good government in a popular constitution is that no executive functionaries should be appointed by popular election: neither by the votes of the people themselves nor by those of their representatives.'

And again:—

'Every executive officer should be nominated, not elected. It is ridiculous that a surveyor or a health officer or even a collector of rates should be appointed by popular suffrage * * * If in cases of this description election by the population is a farce, appointment by the local representative body is little less objectionable.'

These are the remarks of a man who, besides being one of the greatest thinkers of his time, was unquestionably one of the soundest of Radicals, and if I am opposed to liberal institutions generally, I am at all events in good company in this particular. But even if the authority of John Stuart Mill or any other authority you can quote should have been in favour of election of such an executive authority as the village police panchayats are from the nature of their constitution, I would still be strongly opposed to extending that principle into Bengal villages. There is no country in the world where the aristocratic and conservative instincts are stronger than they are in India, and I think I may say in no part of India are they stronger than in Bengal. In my twenty-five years' experience of this country, I have had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of a very large number of gentlemen of the country. And I do declare to you that I have never met any educated native who has not been in his heart of hearts a thorough conservative of conservatives. Every Indian gentleman, I have ever met, has been aristocratic to the core. All the democratic institutions we have, shall I say thrust upon them, have been opposed to their real sentiments. They have not liked to oppose them, but in their hearts they have been in opposition to them. The elective system is not inherent in representation, although with our democratic associations we have come to think it so. In all municipalities, the elective system is the weak point. In Calcutta, it is eminently so; in mufassal districts, more so probably than in Calcutta. That is a serious difficulty underlying the elective system, and the important problem before the Government is to procure real representation without election. We are accustomed enough in England to the difficulties resulting from election, although the system there has grown up with the growth of the constitution. Every conceivable effort has been made to overcome these difficulties by resorting to the ballot and other devices. But in India election is an exotic, and I do not know any member of a representative municipality who has approved of the system, or who would not prefer another system if it could be devised. And here, we are actually contemplating the extension of this vicious system in those rural tracts where, I am thankful to say, it has hitherto had no existence whatever.

"The HON'BLE MR. RISLEY observed very truly, but I think he was unconscious how strongly the remark made against his own argument, that members of panchayats emerge into existence. He could not say how they came into existence, but there they are. Well, that is perfectly true. There is no village in Bengal where you have not your recognised headman. In Bihár, you have your jeth raiyats. Are they elected? In the 24-Parganas, there is no village where there is not a mondol; in Midnapore, they exist under the name of mukhya; in Chittagong, they are called máatiburs. Under whatever name they exist, they are the regular heads of villages. Will you anywhere find that these men have been elected? They are the headmen of the village recognised as such. As a rule they are the descendants of the headmen from time immemorial, but sometimes they have risen to be headmen by their own exertions. But nowhere are they elected. This idea of going into a village, calling in a crowd of villagers, and asking them whom they would elect, who will be their headman, what does it mean? If an answer is given to a question of that kind, they would say:—'Here is our jeth raiyat, here is our mondol.' Wherever a chaukidari panchayat is chosen it is now chosen by the agency of the police, and that is the way they are chosen. The police find out who is the mondol or jeth raiyat, and these are the men who are ordinarily held to be qualified for the appointment. From the very essence of the case, that is the constitution of the panchayat. The Magistrate can appoint these men without difficulty by the executive agency at his disposal. He can do more difficult things than that. When the late census was taken, the District Magistrates appointed in this way enumerators in every village in Bengal, but they did not ask the villagers, as the HON'BLE MR. RISLEY would have done, to elect or select their enumerators.

"In point of fact, this principle of election or selection—it is a mere juggle of words—is not in accordance with the practice of the country, whether in Bengal or in any other Province. In regard to the choice of a panchayat for settlement of their social difficulties, panchayats in questions of marriage or caste, the people adopt a procedure of their own, but they do not elect. But that point is not before the Council. It is a point of which my hon'ble friend made a good deal of; but it is not before us. What we have before us is, the constitution of an executive body entrusted by law with executive functions. How are we to constitute such a body? I say by nomination; there is no other way (to quote Mill again) in which an executive authority can be properly appointed.

"I will assume for the moment that, the position of panchayat is a coveted one among the villagers. Any system you like of election is introduced; there are so many candidates: the panchayat or would be panchayat candidate goes about canvassing for votes; can any gentleman who has experience of Bengal villagers conceive of the head villager going about to the members of the village canvassing for their votes? Assuming him to do so, and assuming the village to be divided into sections and parties, assuming that there is the natural dala dali which exists in almost every village, can any system be more calculated to create village disputes and dissensions than this? You would excite disputes and heart-burnings, and aggravate what is the curse of almost all villages in Bengal, this dala dali system.

"This is on the assumption that, the post of panchayat is a coveted one. But in fact, is it so? I presume all the members of this Council know, as well as I do, that it is a post which every one seeks to avoid if he can. It is difficult, then, to conceive how rules for election are to be prepared by the Local Government. The resources of the Government will be considerably taxed in drafting these rules. It is difficult to understand how, when all the headmen wish to avoid the post, they are to be elected into it; their object will be to be elected out of it. If the Hon'ble Mr. Risley had had practical experience of the working of the Chaukidari Act in Bengal villages, he would have had more hesitation than he has actually shown before he would have brought forward such an impracticable and doctrinaire suggestion. The panchayat is an executive authority. As an authority for the assessment and collection of rates and for the control of the village watch, the position of the panchayat is unique. There is no other similar institution in any other province in India. In Bombay there is the headman, the village patel—a single man, not a panchayat. He is not elected. In Madras, there is the village headman, the patel or kurnam; he also is not elected. In the North-Western Provinces and the Panjab, the idea is unknown; a police panchayat has never been elected from among the people themselves. This particular idea exists in Bengal alone, and is our creation.

"I will not detain the Council longer regarding the constitution of the panchayat. The remarks I have to make on the attributions of the panchayat will come later on in the discussion, when amendments are brought forward on other sections of the Bill; but I have said enough, I trust, to convince you that, if you accept the Hon'ble Mr. Risley's amendment, you commit yourselves to a dangerous innovation, opposed to the traditions of the people and to the welfare of the villagers."

The Hon'ble Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar said:—"I rise just to say a word as dictated by common sense in support of the amendment which has been moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Risley, though I wish the more specific word 'elect' had been preferred to the more comprehensive word 'select.' Selection by a number of people is election, and if a panchayat is to be selected by a number, it would be better if the word 'elect' were used. However, as there is not much difference between the two words, and as the principle is in essence the same, I do not take objection to the word 'select' in the amendment. The hon'ble member in charge of the Bill told us in his opening speech that, in England the control of the police has been withdrawn from villages; but I do not think he has told us if the villagers are still made to pay for the police, and to assess themselves as is being done in this country. I am myself personally very strongly of opinion that the police, like the military, should be entirely under the control of the Central Government. But, then, no particular section of the community ought to be selected to pay for its police, and if any section is so selected, it is but fair and proper that that section should be allowed some share in the control of its police, and that control can only be exercised by a body representing that section. Such representative bodies for Bengal villages have been existing from almost time immemorial, and notwithstanding what has fallen from the hon'ble member opposite, these panchayats have always been elected, though not elected after the modern fashion with all the paraphernalia of polling booths, and the like. But in point of fact, they have been elected. A panchayat means a representative body of five men, and I am glad that the amendment of the hon'ble learned Advocate-General has been carried, thus removing a grammatical absurdity from the Bill. Panchayats, as long as they have been treated with respect, as they ought to be, and not with insolence and all sorts of indignity as they generally now are, have worked admirably well. The elective system, therefore, is a thing not unknown in Bengal. Indeed, it is a very common thing in Bengal, and it is this elective system which the law has hitherto given to villagers in the matter of appointment of panchayats for the partial regulation of the village watch; it is this elective system which Your Honour's own Government in its Resolution on the Police Committee's report expressed its willingness to provide for wherever desirable and practicable: it is this elective system which the hon'ble member in charge of the Bill left intact in the Bill as introduced by him in this Council, but which somehow or other evaporated from the crucible of the Select Committee, partially evaporated, for I find it re-condensed in the shape of a dissent from two hon'ble members of the said Committee; it is this elective system which the amendment proposes to retain as in the original Act, and I have therefore great pleasure in supporting it.

"I must say, Sir, that I have been not a little surprised at the chorus of condemnation of, and opposition to, the elective principle, on the ground of its leading to party spirit by officials, that is, by gentlemen who hail from a country where party spirit constitutes the very life of the nation; where the party spirit, notwithstanding its drawbacks, has in no small degree contributed to the development of practical wisdom and the correction of abuses,—where, in fact, party spirit has been a most efficient and potent factor in advancing civilisation. And, Sir, it is but natural that this should be so, for it is but the counterpart of, and corresponds to, what obtains in the physical universe. I need hardly remind hon'ble and learned members of this Council that, it is the antagonism of opposite polarities, which under creative superintendence has produced and is maintaining the marvellous cosmos of which we are part and parcel. I therefore, for my part, do not apprehend any evil consequences of a serious and permanent character resulting from the development of party spirit, by the carrying out of the elective system. On the contrary, I am confident that it will be attended by just the same blessings which have attended it in England and elsewhere, and I therefore accord my hearty support to the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe said:—"I rise to support the amendment which the Hon'ble Mr. Risley has just moved. It is true I cannot claim for myself anything of the personal experience which is possessed by its mover and has been claimed by the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton; but when I came to look into the matter, and ascertained so far as I could, upon what principles this amendment rested and the grounds upon which it has been assailed, it seemed to me that I could not properly give a silent vote in support of the amendment. The propriety of this amendment has been challenged upon broader grounds than those affecting Bengal. It has been asserted that, it is the outcome of liberal principles to which the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton has declared himself to be now, with almost the zeal of a recent convert, the most uncompromising opponent—principles vicious in the extreme and injurious to this country. What is the position of affairs? Is the elective principle as applied to panchayats a matter of recent history, or one of old date? It cannot be denied that the system of elected panchayats for the management of village affairs is indigenous to this country; it is, perhaps, one of the few remaining products of the earlier civilization which prevailed in this country, and it is not dead. It may have been misused; it may have been prevented from attaining fair action, and the action it has taken may, in some instances, have, owing to its fetters, been such as to produce the very worst results. The Hon'ble Mr. Risley has shown that, in matters of village life and customs of the people of this land, that system prevails. Why should it not prevail in the matter of the village chaukidar? I am not impressed with the authority of the extract quoted from John Stuart Mill in the least, for that great thinker was not, in the passage which has been read to the Council, dealing with such an institution as the village watch, or of the best means of its selection in villages like those in Bengal. There, if I may be permitted to say, lies the fallacy of the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton's observations. It may be perfectly true that, the inhabitants of a village have no claim to control the police. I have not heard it asserted or suggested that they should do so, but the question is—are the village chaukidars a police within the ordinary meaning of the word? It appears to me that they are not. They are a link between the people of the country and the police; they discharge most useful functions in keeping the police informed of the occurrences in the village; but they are not the police, and any step in the direction of turning the village chaukidar into becoming the real efficient police of this country, so as to leave, as the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton has suggested in introducing the Bill, the existing constabulary no particular function to discharge other than those of escort and guard, and to some extent that of a police reserve, that I venture to think can never be brought about. If the village chaukidari system is dead and gone absolutely, in the name of all that is reasonable, let a Bill be introduced to substitute in its place a body of police distinguished from the ordinary police, in that they may be more localized in character, but to be paid for by the general body of ratepayers of the country. That system is, however, not dead. It still lives, maintained by what is practically a hearth-tax, and yet it is said that, as regards the present chaukidars, the people are not to have any voice in the matter. Let me point out to the Council that the principle of selection, or election, or choice, I care not what particular word is used, is most distinctly embodied in the existing law. That existing law requires the Magistrate to go round to each village to explain the elective principle, and to ascertain the wants and wishes of the people in the matter. We say that that is, in principle, the elective system. That, I think, must be conceded at once; and when the matter was before the Police Committee, they have, in section 43 of their report, distinctly stated:—'We would allow all adult male owners of houses in a village to vote for the members of the panchayat, and the names of those thus elected should be submitted to the Magistrate for confirmation.' When that report was submitted to Government, the Government was pleased to state in a Resolution, dated 28th November, 1891, that 'provision would be made for the election of the panchayat in such parts of the country as might be fitted for the exercise of this privilege, and where it is desirable.' Was the pledge which was given in this Resolution to be thrust aside and altogether broken? Most certainly, I think the Council will come to the conclusion that it ought not. Is this Bill, as its title runs, one to amend Act VI of 1870, or to repeal Act VI of 1870? Above all things let there be straightness in our words and in our actions. If this, which is the principle of Act VI of 1870, as amended by Act I of 1886, is not to be thrown to the winds, then the striking out of this clause by the Select Committee is an act not of amendment, but of repeal. Further, in the Statement of Objects and Reasons put forward by the hon'ble member in charge of the Bill, I find it stated that, it is proposed that the Magistrate may, with the sanction of the Local Government, arrange for the election of the panchayat by the ratepayers in the manner most convenient. That represented, I doubt not, the views of this Government at that time and of the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton, whose name was at the foot of it. But since then a change has apparently come over his view of this matter. The hon'ble member in charge of the Bill deals with the question that, the appointment of a member of the panchayat is not a coveted appointment. That may well be so. As far as my reading of this matter goes, it seems that it is so, and I see no reason in the world why, under the existing practice, it should not continue to be so. But we desire that that should be changed; we desire that what has made in a large measure the office of a member of a panchayat undesirable, should be removed. It is impossible to get good work out of an unwilling servant. In 1866, Mr. McNeill made a report on the matter in which he pointed out that, the real difficulty lay in the inability to secure the co-operation of the people in the administration of the law, and he attributed it in great measure to the illegal interference and the exactions of the regular police. How are you to get the co-operation of the people? You cannot get it by thrusting them into an office which they do not desire. The system which is proposed by this amendment will be introduced in places where the people are found fitted for it, and as they become fitted for it. It is said in this report that, the amendment introduced by the law of 1886 was a dead letter? Why so? Because those who were charged with the duty of explaining the principle of the elective system and endeavouring to find out who are fitting persons to be appointed in the panchayat have been unable to discharge that duty. The plea put forward is the want of time. I am well aware that magisterial authorities in Bengal have large calls upon their time, but as a tolerably busy man myself, I am inclined to view the excuse of want of time to mean, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, that the person has not chosen to make time.

"No doubt this measure will operate in what has been described as a piebald fashion; in some districts, the Magistrate will appoint a panchayat; and in others, it will be self-elected. But if local selection of panchayats be introduced in an orderly manner into suitable localities, and then worked according to some definite rule, then a great part of the difficulty will immediately vanish. Finding then an existing institution which may be made use of for the useful purpose, we desire, if possible, by this amendment to bring the people of this country to willingly co-operate, so far as their power enables them to do, in the administration of justice in the country. This amendment will accord, moreover, with those measures of Self-Government that have been previously introduced into this country, and with the provisions which I find in the Chota Nagpur Police Act; providing that if two-thirds of the adult male inhabitants are agreed upon deputing men to serve in the panchayat, they should be so elected.

"I confess, to use the expression of the HON'BLE MR. COTTON, that I am surprised at his stating that, in the comments which have been made and in the opinions which have been given by the various officers consulted in this matter, not a single Commissioner, with the exception of Mr. Power, or a single Magistrate, had written or spoken in favour of it. That I venture to think, and shall show, is an entire mistake. The Commissioner of the Presidency Division, Mr. Westmacott, who was a member of the Police Commission, says:—'On this subject I may claim to speak with some authority, having tried the experiment as reported at length on the 31st March, 1884, to the Government of Sir Rivers Thompson after enquiring into the possibility of forming Union Committees. I believe the rough system of election which I therein indicated to be perfectly practicable in any part of the province if supervised by an intelligent Magistrate. I would call on the villages of a union as I did in 1883-84 to elect a Union Committee, and the representative elected by each village should be the panchayat of that village for chaukidari purposes.' Then Mr. Lowis, Commissioner of Rajshahi, said:—'I do not concur in the opinion as to the undesirability of allowing the villagers to elect their own panchayat."

The HON'BLE the PRESIDENT said:—"I think it should be pointed out that, the hon'ble member is quoting from a letter which was not written in reference to the present Bill."

The HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE continued:—"I am sorry if I am speaking under a mistake, but the Bill of which MR. LOWIS is speaking was, as I understand, the first draft Bill and contained this provision:—' or he may with the previous sanction of the Local Government, direct that the adult male rate-paying inhabitants of the village shall elect, subject to any conditions and in any manner and according to any rules that he may think fit, a person or a specified number of persons to be the panchayat or members of the panchayat for such village.'"

The HON'BLE MR. COTTON said:—"The remarks I made, and which the Advocate-General is traversing, had reference to the reports of Commissioners with reference to the Bill introduced by me into Council and to no other."

The HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE said:—"That, I have gathered; but as I have pointed out the Bill which was introduced had practically the same clause as the amendment proposed by the HON'BLE MR. RISLEY. Of course, my observations must be taken with that restriction.

"Then the Magistrate of Champaran said:—'I would allow villages to elect the new members of the panchayat.'

"The Magistrate of Backergunge said:—'I see no objection to the elective principle.'

"The Commissioner of Patna writes:—'I think it questionable whether the elective system is likely to succeed so generally that it is desirable to make it the standard. Perhaps the Commissioner might fix for each district or subdivision whether the members should be appointed or elected;' and the Magistrate of Nadia said:—'I would introduce the election of panchayats only in a few advanced districts, and as an experimental measure for the present, and extend it gradually to more backward places if the measure is found to be successful.'

"I quote these Officers' opinions as speaking in favour of the principle of the amendment, with the limitations and safeguards contained in that amendment. No one has suggested that, it should be introduced as a rule or save under the safeguards contained in the amendment. No doubt a great many, a very large number of officials, have written against it, but they were thinking of elections conducted on the lines of elections of Members of Parliament, or of Municipal Commissioners. But the HON'BLE MR. RISLEY deprecated that idea altogether, and it was wholly foreign to the purpose of his amendment. Some of the gentlemen who had written against it had done so on a ground which if valid at all it would be a good ground for reversing a great deal of the legislature of this country, and I would add some very recent legislation in the Houses of Parliament. If it is not desired to obtain the opinion of the people of this country, then of course the matter may be disposed of upon principles of the most purely paternal Government. But, so far as I can form any opinion, they have not proceeded upon these lines. One Magistrate supports his opposition to the application of the elective principle to panchayats by reference to some recent utterances on the part of Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour, deprecating an appeal to the elective principle. Whether the noble Lord and his kinsman had in so delivering themselves that presage which dying men are supposed to have of the future, I know not; but at all events the principle of ascertaining from the people of the country what their wants and wishes were, what may be safely given, and what should be prudently withheld—has not been the curse of England. It has been the life and the backbone of England. Of course it is impossible to eradicate party feeling; but it has in England at least been by no means a hindrance to material prosperity. I have to apologise for detaining the Council so long upon matters on which I have, and can have, no personal knowledge. My knowledge is derived from what I have read, and from that which so far as I know has been the course of legislation in this country; and I can only say that, in a few instances which have come before me as to how the panchayat system works, that it works admirably, and is thoroughly understood by the people of the country. In those instances, I have found the most serious questions dealt with and disposed of by panchayats. The difficulties which are spoken of are, difficulties which arise from compulsory action from attempts to make unwilling servants work, and subjecting them to various kinds of trouble and annoyances; we, on the contrary, desire that they should regard themselves as the depositaries of a power to be exercised beneficially for the good of their co-villagers."

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder said:—"I wish to add one word to [the arguments in support of the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Risley. If this amendment is not accepted, the law will stand thus, and the section will run in this way:—

'The District Magistrate may, by an order in writing, appoint not less than three, nor more than five, residents in any village or group of villages, within the district of which he has charge, to be the panchayat thereof.'

"Under Act I (B.C.) of 1886, we know there is a very good provision giving the people some sort of voice in the selection of the panchayat. It is now proposed to take away that voice of the people in the selection of the panchayat. Let us see how the provisions of Act I of 1886 were carried out. If you refer to the report of the Police Committee, and also to the report of Mr. Munro's Committee of 1883, you will find this. At page 19 of the report of the Police Committee, they say:—'Mr. Munro's Committee, it will be remembered, found that panchayats had not been judiciously selected, and attributed this in a great measure to the selection having been left to the Police.' So that we find that even when the law required it, the Magistrates had not been able to go to the spot and select the panchayat. They were obliged to rely on police reports in appointing the members of the panchayat, and if you leave the law as it is now, will not the same thing recur? The very evil you want to avoid will recur; for, when the Magistrates were required by law to go to the spot, they did not do so. They could not do so. How, then, would they now appoint the members of the panchayat? They would not go themselves or send their subordinate Magistrates to the spot, and the only means they would have, would be selection according to the police reports. I cannot myself think how otherwise the Magistrates will make their selections and appointments. They would remain at the sadar stations of their districts, and who would give them information as to the fitness of the men to be appointed? They must, of necessity, be obliged to depend on police reports, and we can very well imagine what the result will be.

"With reference to what the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton has said, that the people of this country are the most aristocratic and conservative in their hearts, that educated Indians are not entirely in favour of the elective system, I would ask, how would he account for the opinions he has received from the several native associations? With all their aristocratic and conservative instincts, we find almost all of them in favour of the elective system."

The HON'BLE MR. ALLEN said:—"It is hardly fair that the whole of the arguments should be on one side, but I do not propose to detain the Council more than three or four minutes. The hon'ble mover of the amendment has given us a lengthy and minute account of his experiences in bengalee villages when he went there without his chaprásis. The wisdom and ability of those villagers as depicted by him are something deserving of the highest admiration; according to him they have a remarkable capacity for managing the most difficult and the most abstruse matters, if only they are left to themselves and not worried. Obviously the question arises, how is it that with all this extraordinary capacity and with this combination of all the virtues which the HON'BLE MR. RISLEY has discovered in these acute zealous villagers, we are here to-day for the purpose of considering the propriety of appointing some sort of police to do the work in these villages? How is it that these very capable villagers have been so incapable of providing for their own security and for the protection of their own property? The chaukidars have been under their control for generations after generations, and it is because they have been an utter and complete failure that the necessity has arisen for the Central Government to look into the matter, and see whether the village chaukidar should not be subjected to some better and wiser control than that these very capable villagers have hitherto exercised. I am quite willing to admit that caste panchayats are in constant use, and do excellent work within their castes. The fact is that in caste, as its essence and its root, there is the element of religion, and panchayats within the caste have hitherto worked with reasonable efficiency. The religious sanction has not yet been cast off within the castes. Whether these caste panchayats are obtained by anything which can be called election, or whether the members of particular families have not the right to be the panchayat from generation to generation I cannot say; but this I can say that the very cohesion and efficiency of caste is the great obstacle to any organisation of villages which are mere local areas. Villagers are not connected now-a-days by blood descent or religious bonds as formerly they were. In those days the village consisted of men of the same caste, and any others allowed to attach themselves to it were in a position of subordination and subjection, and then the village system was a good system; excellent government was maintained, and things were kept in order. But all that has ceased, and villages are now formed by bringing together a number of separate bodies who have nothing in common except the local proximity. The very cohesion within the caste is an obstacle to cohesion out of it, and that is the reason probably why the panchayat system, so efficient in caste questions, has yet allowed the village organisations to fall into the state it has.

"A great deal of eloquence has been expended here to-day on what appears to me an exceedingly trifling matter. The principle of election has been worshipped as a fetish. Whereas, in this proposed section, it is for itself without any consequences. Election is a good principle or a bad principle, but election which can be reduced to a nullity, which can, at any moment, be set aside, appears to me to be an idle thing; and an amendment which does not attempt to cut down the absolute power of the Magistrate to nullify the election may be very amusing as a play, but it is not solid work. If the hon'ble member would add a section, compelling the Magistrate to accept the selected panchayat, then there would be some meaning in his proposal. The Advocate-General has challenged the negation of this clause, as being practically a repeal of Act VI of 1870, as amended by Act I of 1886; but there is a vast difference between the amendment of the HON'BLE MR. RISLEY and the provision which existed in the amended section of the Act of 1870, viz., that the Magistrate should ascertain on the spot by any means he thinks best to employ the persons who, in the opinion of the villagers, are most proper to be appointed members of the panchayat. There it is the Magistrate who is to select; in this amendment it is the adult males of the village who are to select.

"There is nothing in the Bill as amended by the Select Committee to prevent the Magistrate from doing exactly what that section of Act VI of 1870 required him to do. It is perfectly open to him to do so, and I suppose there are few Magistrates who would think of appointing a panchayat without doing exactly what is laid down in the section. But to give the power of selection to the villagers is quite a different matter. The Advocate-General asks, if the principle of election is new? No, it is as old as the human race; and if the first election had not been what it was, we should not now be suffering as we now are."

The Hon'ble Mr. Wallis said:—"I should hesitate, Sir, at this stage to avail myself of the opportunity of speaking, were it not that I consider this is a question on which members are expected to give more than a silent vote; a question which should be discussed solely on its own merits, namely, as to the desirability or otherwise, in the public interests, of making a change in the existing system of appointing the members of the panchayat.

"I may be pardoned in thinking that, the idea of seriously considering the suggestion put forward by the Police Commission of 1871 to give the power to the adult rate-paying inhabitants of villages to elect the panchayat was a mistake; and it is little short of a misfortune that, the suggestion should have been given shape as set forth in the section of the draft Bill which it is now proposed by the majority of the Select Committee to omit.

"We are all well aware that there is nothing new in the proposal that, the Magistrate shall appoint the members of the panchayat, for we have this provision both in Act VI of 1870 and in the amending Act I of 1886; and it is solely on the recommendation of the Committee referred to that it was proposed that, the system of allowing the people to provide for the safety of their own persons and property in their own way should be further extended.

"It is admitted on all sides how very unpopular the position of a seat on the panchayat is, and how frequent the applications are to be permitted to resign. This, coupled with the fact that it has been found necessary, under section 8, to provide for a fine being inflicted on any person appointed to be a member of the panchayat refusing to undertake the office, goes to prove that the public spirit displayed by the rate-paying inhabitants of the villages is not so great as to insure the proposed system of election being appreciated, or the seats being warmly contested.

"The Committee, which recommended the introduction of this elective system, stated in their report that Act VI of 1870 may, in short, be defined as a timid and partial attempt to introduce into rural villages a sort of local self-government in criminal matters, and also stated that the working of the Act through a long series of years might be summed up in the one word 'failure.' They further state that it had been everywhere found necessary, in the interests of the public, for the Magistrate to interfere to secure the proper performance of the duties of the panchayat, and yet it is considered by some desirable to further extend this partial and timid attempt to introduce into rural villages a sort of local self-government in criminal matters.

"It is not probable that, under the proposed system of election we are likely to see an improvement in the constitution of the panchayat. It would, therefore, be most desirable for the Legislature, now that the existing Act is being amended, to make such provisions as are likely to bring about the improvements for which, I take it, the Act is being altered; and I am constrained to say that, this can only be done by continuing to allow the Magistrate to appoint the members of the panchayat, and by giving him more control over the rural police than he is at present able legally to exercise.

"It has been stated in this Council Chamber that, 'it was not the right to serve on the panchayat which was put up to auction, but the privilege of exemption.' Why, then, this desire for election?

"It has also been shown on the very highest authority that the work done by the panchayat is, the reverse of satisfactory. The Committee which was appointed as far back as 1882 pointed out that, whatever measure of success had been attained was due in no small degree to police interference, and that the panchayat was not unjustly accused of under-assessing the rich and heavily taxing the poorer villagers, and the members of the Committee were unanimous in their condemnation of the then existing state of things. Such being the facts of the case, I venture to state that to give the election of the panchayat into the hands of land agents and illiterate villagers, would be to intensify the evils which exist.

"I am therefore strongly of opinion that the time has come when the panchayat and the rural police should be placed more under executive control, and I therefore give my cordial assent to the omission of sub-section (2) of section 2 from the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Risley in reply said:—"It is hardly necessary for me to trouble the Council with a reply, but there are three points to which it is well I should refer. First, as to the opinions of the Commissioners of Divisions. The Council will observe that at the instance of the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton, I read out the opinion of each Commissioner as I referred to it, and the Council can judge whether the interpretation I have put upon them is the right one or not. Secondly, with reference to JOHN STUART MILL's opinion, no one can have greater respect for the opinion of that writer than I. But he can hardly be cited in this connection. There seems to be both here and in Europe two kinds of police. There is the State police, which is equivalent to the Bengal constabulary, and there is the rural police, and what JOHN STUART MILL said had reference to a State police which is now the County police. In fact, I am under the impression that at the time when the treatise on representative Government was written, the village constabulary had not been amalgamated with the County police, and were paid by the poor rate guardians, who are an elected body. The same state of things exists in the north of Germany and in other places at the present time, where there is the regular police and the local police analogous to our village chaukidars. The one is under the State; the other is under the communal body, which is an elected body. MILL seems to refer in every case to the county police, the provincial police, and not to the local police who, in the places to which I have referred, are under local hands. In Austria as well, the village commune chooses the village police.

"As regards the remarks of the HON'BLE MR. ALLEN, as to the panchayat being an evil by reason of the chaukidar being bad, I do not know that it has any direct reference to the question before the Council. It is not by any means clear to me that, the chaukidar is so bad as has been attempted to be made out, but I should prefer to discuss that point on the subsequent amendments."

The HON'BLE the PRESIDENT said:—"When this question was considered by the Government before the Bill was drawn, I considered it a point of so much difficulty that I thought it would be better it should be left to the decision of the Council, and I undertook to be guided by the views of the majority of the Council on this subject; and would not declare on the part of the Government any definite view as to whether the clause which has been struck out by the Select Committee, and which it is now proposed to re-introduce, should be retained or not. And I may congratulate myself on having taken this course, because undoubtedly the discussion has been one of very considerable ability, and has thrown great light on the question, and I think the conclusion to which the Council will come after having had the advantage of hearing all the speeches which have been made, and after considering all the information which has been obtained, will carry great weight with the public and conduce to the successful working of the Bill in the form which it will take. For my own part, it seems to me quite clear that the question is not so important as some hon'ble members have considered it. I cannot share the HON'BLE MR. COTTON's view that, the principle of election will be in the highest degree injurious to the administration of the Department. Still less can I hold the view which has apparently influenced a great number of the independent bodies who have sent in their opinions to the Government, and who have been carried away by the charm of the blessed word 'election.' The point before us is—what is the best way of creating a panchayat? To this there can be only one answer, as far as regards the principle by which we should be governed; and it cannot be better stated than in the words of the HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE that, the principle should be that of ascertaining the wants and wishes of the people. Both parties are entirely agreed on one important point, namely, that the leading man in a village does stand out and become visible to the whole of the people, whether he be called a jeth raiyat, or a mondol or a máatibar, or in the case of a caste, the panchayat, which, as the HON'BLE MR. RISLEY told us, grew like Topsy, and no one knows how it has been created. There are always one or more leading men in a village; the only question is, how to get them to be the panchayat; whether, as is done at present and as the HON'BLE MR. WALLIS has advocated, by appointing them through the Police officials, or by any other system. The Committee appointed to consider the question gave their opinion very clearly, especially in paragraph 42, as to the shortcomings of the panchayats as now appointed, and then, as it seems to me, they rather rushed at their fence, and without stating any particular reason, said:—'This won't do; let us try a new plan; let us have election.' The use of the word 'election' has been unfortunate, for it has created in the minds of the people the idea that the procedure which was intended would be of a much more formal character than was contemplated, and it would have been more correctly indicated, as it has been described by the HON'BLE MR. RISLEY, as selection by acclamation. At any rate, I am glad the hon'ble member has excluded the word 'election' and substituted for it 'selection', which is a much more appropriate word to indicate what is intended. It seems to me, though I was rather surprised to hear the HON'BLE MR. ALLEN say the contrary, that what is proposed is not very different from the present law, namely, that the Magistrate shall go to the spot and ascertain the wishes of the people. That is the postulate which the HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE has laid down, namely, that we should ascertain the wants and wishes of the people, and they will be ascertained by calling all the male adult villagers, putting them the question, and leaving them two or three hours to consider it; after which they would come forward and say—'Here are our leading men, appoint them to be our panchayat.' I cannot conceive of any Magistrate who would not consider this very much more likely to attain the desired result than calling upon the Sub-Inspector of Police to say who are the leading men in a village. But at the same time you will understand that there are great restrictions on the possibility of carrying out this procedure. The HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE, assuming that others possess the great capacity for coping with work with which he has been gifted, has represented that the Magistrate can do this if he likes; but considering how hard our Magistrates are worked, and how many important duties they have to perform, it is evident that if they are to carry out in any large degree what is suggested here, they must leave other, perhaps more important, things undone. Indeed in such cases the question with any hard-worked man is, when a new task is imposed upon him, what is he to leave undone? The Judicial Department of the Government issues a circular enjoining on a Magistrate to do certain important things; the Financial Department urges him not to leave undone some other equally important things; the Revenue Department issues a circular impressing upon him that this is the most important thing of all, and must on no account be neglected; and with all these demands upon his time, not being quite an Advocate-General, he is not able to do everything. Therefore, the result of the amendment will be, as Mr. Forbes has aptly said, that we shall have a somewhat piebald administration. We shall have some villages in which the panchayats are selected in this way, and others in which they are selected in the old way. It does not seem to me that this would be any drawback, but, on the contrary, that it would be rather desirable; for we shall have the opportunity of testing whether this is the best way of bringing the best men to act on the panchayat or not. If we find it is the best way, we shal be more willing to extend the system. But if it does not prove to be the best way, if we find that the most influential and the most prominent villagers manage that their names shall not be put forward, but that inferior men like that family servant who has been mentioned here are selected, then we would not extend it. On these grounds, I am bound to say that I entertain a very open mind on the subject, but on the whole I am in favour of the amendment. I think it cannot produce any serious evil, and is not likely to be very widely used; but so far as it will be used, and honestly and seriously used, it is very likely to do good."

CALCUTTA POLICE OFFICE,
The 18th July 1892.

J. LAMBERT,
Commissioner of Police.

THE following report is published for general information.

H. H. RISLEY,

Offg. Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

REPORT ON THE WORKING OF THE FIRE-BRIGADE IN THE TOWN AND SUBURBS OF CALCUTTA AND IN HOWRAH DURING THE YEAR 1891-92.

No. 4684, dated Calcutta, the 18th July 1892.

From—J. LAMBERT, Esq., C.I.E., Commissioner of Police, Calcutta,

To—The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Municipal Department.

I HAVE the honour to submit, under section 30 of Act IV (B.C.) of 1883, a report on the working of the Fire-Brigade in the Town and Suburbs of Calcutta and in Howrah during the year 1891-92.

2. The brigade was in attendance at 37 fires during the year; 10 of these occurred in the Town, 14 in the Suburbs, and 13 in Howrah, as compared with 33 fires in the preceding year. There occurred also 2 fires which were extinguished by the local police. The value of the property destroyed by fire during the year under report was Rs. 6,74,078, against Rs. 73,434 destroyed in the preceding year.

3. Of the fires which occurred during the past year, 3 called for special notice—

I. On the 16th May 1891 a fire broke out in the hold of the American ship Kenilworth, the cargo of which, consisting of jute, linseed, saltpetre, and hides, suffered damage to the extent of Rs. 1,70,000. This fire is supposed to have been caused by some coolies smoking in the hold.

II. On the 11th March 1892, at 2-30 P.M., a fire broke out in a golepatta hut at Chaulputty, Beliaghatta. A strong wind was blowing at the time, and the fire rapidly spread to the adjoining rice godowns. This fire lasted seven days, and 86 houses and godowns, and, it is estimated, upwards of 50,000 maunds of rice, valued at Rs. 1,50,000, were destroyed. The damage to the godowns and dwelling-houses was further estimated at one lakh of rupees.

III. On the same day, and almost the same hour, two piles of jute in the yard of the Sibpur Jute Mills, valued at Rs. 2,00,000, caught fire and continued burning for seven days.

The occurrence at the same time of these two very serious fires—the one in Howrah and the other in the suburbs beyond Sealdah—taxed the resources of the brigade, both men and engines, to their utmost. Four steam-engines, 4 manual engines, and 6,500 feet (or nearly 1¼ miles) of hose were in use at one time.

3. A memorandum of the fires and a statement of the receipts and expenditure on behalf of the brigade are enclosed.

4. During the year under review five persons in the Town and four in the Suburbs were prosecuted under the Indian Explosives Act IV of 1884 for offences relating to the manufacture, possession, and sale of fireworks, and they were all convicted.

5. No licenses for the sale of fireworks were withdrawn during the year.

Memorandum of fires in the Town and Suburbs of Calcutta and in Howrah from 1st April 1891 to 31st March 1892.

* Mean of 6 days.

Explanation.—Summary.—The normal means of air pressure and temperature are the arithmetical average or means of the reading during the same period. The humidity of the atmosphere is expressed as percentage, saturated air being presented by 100. A clear sky is denoted by 0 and an overcast sky by 1. Rainfall: the normal mean are the numerical means or average of the rainfall in that district determined from the returns sent in by the subdivisional statio[n] district, i.e., from total rainfall at the subdivisional stations in the district sending in returns divided by the number of stations. A rainy day is one on for the week ending Saturday, the 30th of July 1892.

Explanation.—... indicates that no rain has fallen. If the return for any day has not been received, the corresponding space is left blank. If any of the returns are missing, the corresponding spaces in the total rainfall columns are left blank. With reference to the column of rainy days, the definition of a rainy day is when at least 0·1 inch of rain has fallen.

Calcutta, the 2nd August 1892.

SUMMARY OF THE METEOROLOGICAL AND RAINFALL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN BENGAL, AND OF THE METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN ASSAM, FOR THE WEEK ENDING 8 A.M. SATURDAY, THE 30TH OF JULY 1892.

DURING the second half of the previous week a very feeble depression had formed over South-West Bengal, and had then advanced in a north-westerly direction, and by the close of the week it had passed away from Bengal, and a rather rapid increase of pressure had taken place in its rear, so that the strong monsoon current which had been previously blowing over the province was falling off in strength. The rapid increase of pressure continued on the 24th, or the first day of the present week, the rise at the central and south-western stations exceeding a tenth of an inch, but even with this rapid increase, pressure was still below the normal of the day. A slight reaction set in at the eastern stations on the 25th, but the rise of pressure continued over the greater part of the province, the increase equalling a tenth of an inch at the western stations, and the general distribution of pressure was fairly normal on this day. A further increase of pressure, however, took place on the 26th, the increase being again largest in Bihár, and the distribution of pressure became unusual, as the lowest pressures were reported at the southern and south-western stations, such as at Saugor Island, Balasore, Calcutta, and Jessore, while pressure was very considerably in excess of the normal in the north and north-west of the province. Hence an area of comparatively low pressure had formed over the south-western districts and over the head of the Bay, and a feeble cyclonic circulation of winds commenced in connection with it. On the 27th pressure was falling in the north-west angle of the Bay and rising generally elsewhere, and the feeble barometric depression with its accompanying cyclonic circulation of winds became more distinctly marked. On the 28th pressure rose rapidly over the greater part of Bengal and over the east of the Bay, while it was rising very slowly in the north-west angle. Hence on this date the depression became still more clearly defined, and a very perfect cyclonic circulation of winds accompanied the small storm, and though the winds near the centre were light, strong winds were blowing to the east and south of the small storm. On the 29th the small depression was rather nearer the Orissa coast than it had been, but it had not in any way increased in intensity; but, if anything, the winds to the south and east of it were decreasing in force, while on the morning of the 30th or on the last day of the week the centre of the depression had passed over Orissa and was perhaps in the extreme south of Chota Nagpur.

With the unusually rapid increase of pressure which set in over Bengal in the early part of the week, conditions quickly became less favourable for the advance of the monsoon current over Bengal, which thus rapidly weakened from the beginning of the week. Again, with the formation of the feeble whirl or depression in the north-west angle of the Bay from about the 26th or 27th instant, the monsoon winds began to feed into or be deflected towards the depression, and hence did not pass freely over Bengal. For the whole week, therefore, the monsoon current passing over Bengal has been much weaker than in previous weeks, and hence rainfall has been generally both local and light in almost all districts, and for a part of the time almost absent in some districts; but at the close of the week with the inland advance of the depression, the monsoon winds were again flowing more freely over the province. Hence the rainfall for the week under review has been comparatively light in all districts, and in most cases has not amounted to much more than half the normal amounts.

Pressure—Has been decidedly high almost throughout the week in the northern and north-western districts, but it has been low in South Bengal, Orissa, and in the north-west angle of the Bay. The excess has averaged about 0·05″ in North Bihár, and at Purnea it has been 0·07″; while the general excess pressure in the northern half of the province has been from 0·03″ to 0·05″. On the other hand, in Orissa and round the north of the Bay pressure has been almost normal in amount. In Assam, Sibsagar shows a defect of 0·032″, while Dhubri and Silchar show excess pressures of about 0·05″ to 0·02.″

Temperature.—The variations of temperature during the week have been small and have to a certain extent followed on the variations in the heaviness of the rainfall. For the whole week the mean temperature in Orissa, North Bengal, East Bengal, and South Bihár has been slightly in excess of the normal, but the excess only averages about half a degree. On the other hand, temperature has been almost absolutely normal in South-West Bengal, and slightly in defect in North Bihár and Chota Nagpur, but the largest defect only equals a degree in the last-named district. The mean temperature for the week in Assam has been almost absolutely normal.

Rainfall—Has been unusually light during the week. The heaviest falls have occurred in East Bengal, where they have averaged 2·60 inches, but even here the fall is about two inches less than the normal. In all other divisions of the province the falls equal roughly from an inch in North Bihár and South-West Bengal to an inch and-a-half in Chota Nagpur and an inch and two-thirds in North Bengal. In all districts of the province indeed the falls have been largely in defect of the normal. In South-West Bengal, South Bihár, and Chota Nagpur the falls have been from two to two and-a-half inches less than the normal, while in North Bengal, Orissa, and North Bihár the falls have been about an inch and-a-half less than usual. Taking the various divisions to have an equal value in the calculation, the rainfall of Bengal for the week may be said to have been equal to about 57 per cent. of the normal.

The following table gives the summary of the temperature and rainfall data of each of the seven meteorological divisions of the province for the week ending Saturday, the 30th of July 1892:—

The mean pressure, temperature, &c., are deduced from the traces of the Barograph and Thermograph.

The maximum and minimum temperatures are obtained from self-registering thermometers. All the thermometers are verified, and the readings have been corrected to a standard constructed and verified at the Kew Observatory. They are exposed under a thatched shed open at the sides, and are suspended four feet above the ground.

The barometer readings are corrected approximately to those of the standard, Newman's No. 86, formerly at the Surveyor-General's Office.

The hygrometric elements are obtained from Tables III, IV, and V of the official tables computed in the Meteorological Office, and based on Regnault's modifications of August's formula.

The directions and the movement of the wind are taken from the trace of a Beckley's anemograph.

The mouth of the rain-gauge is one foot above the ground.

PART I.

Orders and Notifications by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, the High Court, Government Treasury, &c.

ORDERS BY THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL.

NOTIFICATION.

The 6th August 1892.—The Lieutenant-Governor announces with deep regret that Sir John Edgar has resigned the Civil Service. The loss caused by this event is the greater, because it follows so closely after the deaths of Sir Henry Harrison, Mr. Boxwell, and Mr. Worsley, and no body of officers, however able, can fail to feel their strength impaired by the loss of so many men of such exceptional ability and character within so short a time. His Honour deems it proper to put on record a brief statement of the past services of this distinguished officer.

Sir John Edgar arrived in India in 1862, and spent from 1863 to 1872 as Assistant and Deputy Commissioner in the district of Cachar. The intimate knowledge which he there gained of the Tea Coolie Emigration question, and of the treatment of the savages on the North-East Frontier, has been of material assistance to the Government in subsequent years. When the Lushai disturbances of 1870 broke out, he was engaged in a political tour among those tribes, and was exposed to great danger, but he returned safely to Cachar and became the Chief Political Officer with the Lushai Expedition of 1871. For his service in this capacity he received the decoration of the C.S.I. From Cachar he was transferred to Darjeeling, where he was Deputy Commissioner for five years, and used his opportunities to acquire that knowledge which has made him a recognized authority in matters relating to Buddhist literature and religion, as well as to the affairs of Tibet. Between 1878 and 1884 he served as Magistrate and Collector in Shahabad and Champaran, and as Commissioner in the Patna, Chota Nagpur, Dacca, Chittagong and Presidency Divisions, thereby acquiring an extensive and varied acquaintance with all parts of Bengal. As President of the Excise Commission in Bengal he laid the foundation of the important changes which have since taken place in the working of that Department. In 1884 he became one of the Secretaries, and in 1887 Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in which capacity he has been the trusted adviser of two Lieutenant-Governors. In 1889 he was honoured by the Knighthood of the Order of the Indian Empire.

When Sir Charles Elliott became Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, his want of acquaintance with the personnel of the official staff, and with the past history of all current business, would have been a serious impediment to progress had he not found in Sir John Edgar a friend and a confidant whose judgment was never at fault, whose advice was always candid and far-seeing, and whose exertions to assist his Chief were unwearied. If the Administration of Bengal during the first year of Sir Charles Elliott's tenure of office maintained or advanced its old high reputation, it was chiefly due to the co-operation and counsel of Sir John Edgar.

H. J. S. COTTON,

Chief Secy. to the Govt. of Bengal.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT,—BENGAL.

DISTRICT ROAD FUND.

NOTIFICATION No. 243.

Dated the 6th August 1892.

THE subjoined annual accounts and report of the District Road Committee of the Chittagong Hill Tracts for the year 1891-92, together with the remarks of the Commissioner of the Chittagong Division thereon, are published for general information.

No. 39R., dated Rangamati, the 1st June 1892.

From—C. S. MURRAY, ESQ., C.I.E., Assistant Commissioner, Chittagong Hill Tracts,
To—The Commissioner of the Chittagong Division.

I HAVE the honour to submit herewith, in duplicate, the annual account and report on the working of the District Road Fund of this district for the year 1891-92, terminating on 31st March 1892.

2. The year opened with a balance of Rs. 8,021-2-5, to which was added Rs. 2,000, on account of contribution made by the Public Works Department towards the cost of supervision of the Provincial Civil Works of this district for the year 1890-91. These sums, together with the annual Government grant of Rs. 10,000, and miscellaneous receipts of Rs. 388-0-8, made up the total sum of Rs. 20,409-3-1 as the working capital of this district.

3. The total expenditure of the year was Rs. 9,804-2-6. The details of expenditure are set forth in the annexed statement.

4. The balance at the close of the year was Rs. 10,605-0-7.

5. Original works.—No original works were undertaken during the year of report.

6. Repairs—Rauzan to Demagri road—The portion of this road from Rauzan to Rangamati was greatly improved. This portion of the road was kept in good order during the year of report. The temporary bridges were put into complete order, and the earthwork renewed and raised where it was necessary. The portion of the road from Rangamati to Demagri was also greatly improved in several places by new diversion lines, and the throwing up of strong temporary bridges over the nullas. A separate estimate for the maintenance of this portion of the road, and the construction of some substantial sawn timber bridges, was submitted, but sanction not having been received within the year, only a part of the work detailed in the estimate was executed, and eight sawn timber bridges constructed. As the expenditure on this portion of the work has nothing to do with the District Road Fund money, there is no necessity for showing the details of expenditure in the accounts.

7. The dák road from Chandragona to Bandarban was also greatly improved. For the last six years, the dák runners abandoned the direct line from Chandragona to Sylock, close to Napitpukur, and went round through Kodala. As this was a very round-about way, the former line was thoroughly improved, and the Postal Department have passed orders on the runners to adopt this line.

8. The roads Nos. 14, 15, and 16 having been struck off the list of District Roads, no expenditure was incurred on them. As the Frontier Police guards at Ruma were withdrawn, there was no necessity for repairing the Ruma station road, hence no outlay on that road.

9. All other roads of the district were maintained as usual by clearing jungle and constructing temporary bridges.

10. The miscellaneous repairs call for no special remarks.

Explanatory Note.

1. The excess expenditure on Bandarban-Pooranghur and Dhobasury road is apparent, but not actual, as the expenditure includes one cheque for Rs. 150 charged in the accounts of 1889-90, but not cashed till this year.

2. The expenditure of Rs. 291-10-8 under head "Establishment" on account of contribution for leave and pensionary allowances of the District Engineer is recoverable from him as the Government has cancelled the sanction.

C. S. MURRAY,
Assistant Commissioner.

Remarks recorded on the Annual Account of the Road Fund of the Chittagong Hill Tracts for the year ending 31st March 1892, received with the Assistant Commissioner's No. 39R., dated 1st June 1892.

No. 265H., dated Chittagong, the 7th June 1892.

From—W. B. OLDHAM, ESQ., Commissioner of the Chittagong Division,
To—The Assistant Commissioner of the Chittagong Hill Tracts.

THE expenditure shown against "Public Works" in one copy of Statement No. 6, Part I, should be Rs. 9,637-13-7, and not Rs. 9,632-13-7 as shown therein. This correction has been made in this office.

2. The account submitted relates to the year 1891-92. The Assistant Commissioner is requested to explain why the contribution of Rs. 2,000 from Public Works Department, for the supervision of the Provincial Civil Works for the year 1890-91, has been shown herein, and also why the contribution of Rs. 2,000 for the year 1891-92, which was made in Government order No. 1070A., dated 24th February 1892, forwarded to him with this office memorandum No. 229M., dated 5th March 1892, has not been shown.

3. The pay of an orderly, at Rs. 4-8 a month, from 10th September to 9th October 1891, is shown to be Rs. 4-7-4, while by calculation it comes to Rs. 4-7-1.

4. The original works provided for were stopped by me in favour of the main frontier road.

Memo. from—W. B. OLDHAM, ESQ., Commissioner of the Chittagong Division,
To—The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Public Works Department.

EXTRACT submitted to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Public Works Department, with reference to his letter No. 3217R.C., dated 23rd June 1892.

Extract paragraph 3 from letter No. 70*R., dated 5th July* 1892, from the Assistant Commissioner of the Chittagong Hill Tracts, to the Commissioner of Chittagong.

"THE question of the payment of contribution by the Public Works Department towards the supervision of works appertaining to that Department was settled in 1887-88, and the amount due for that year was not drawn until the 31st March 1888, and credited to the Fund in April, i.e., in 1888-89. Since then, to avoid two years' contribution being credited in one, the practice has been to credit the amount due for a certain year to the account of the subsequent year; and consequently the contribution made in Government order No. 1070A., dated 24th February 1892, received under cover of your memorandum No. 229M., dated the 5th March 1892, has been credited in the current year's account."

Information has been received through the Board of Trade that on 9th February 1892 the British barque Argyll was totally wrecked on a dangerous shoal lying eastward of Ursula island, south-east coast of Paláwan island :—

The position of this shoal (Argyll shoal), as determined by the Commander of the Spanish gun vessel Marivelos, is with Ursula island bearing N. 72° W., distant about 5 miles, or in approximately lat 8° 18½′ N., long. 117° 35′ E.

CHINA SEA—MACCLESFIELD BANK.

Existence of shoal spots.

THE British Admiralty has given notice (No. 269 of 1892) that a recent examination by Commander W. U. Moore, H. M. Surveying vessel Penguin, of the western rim of Macclesfield bank, has disclosed many spots shoaler than heretofore charted.

The general result of the survey, which embraced 95 miles of the western rim of the bank, shows that the average breadth of the rim is about 3 miles, and that the depths over it are 6 to 33 fathoms.

In the lagoon itself, the shoalest head, 5 fathoms was found.

Until publication of the full survey, the following spots should be noted :—

Cathay shoal, reported by the P. and O. Company's steamer Cathay (see Notice to Mariners, No. 497 of 1891), is 9 cables in length in a north and south direction, and 8 cables wide. On the shallowest part, in the centre, not less than 7 fathoms could be found. This shoal east is in lat 15° 54′ N., long. 113° 58½′ E.

Walker shoal, situated in the lagoon of the atoll, is circular in shape, and three-quarters of a mile in diameter. The shoalest spot, 5 fathoms in the centre, is in lat. 15° 55′ N., long 114° 28½′ E. The general depths over this shoal are 7 to 8 fathoms.

Oliver shoal, in lat. 16° 4½′ N., long 114° 29½′ E., was not examined in detail, but a depth of 6 fathoms was obtained on it. Shoaler water probably exists in the locality.

NOTE—Attention is called to notice to Mariners, No. 560 of 1891, in which vessels are cautioned not to cross Macclesfield bank, but to navigate "between Macclesfield bank and Bombay reef."

2. In reply, I am directed to say that the Lieutenant-Governor is pleased to authorise the District Board of Mymensingh to accept the offer, and to request that you will be so good as to convey to Babu Dharani Kanta Lahiri Choudry an expression of His Honour's thanks for his public spirit and liberality. Read—

The Report of the Pauperism Committee, dated the 8th February, 1892, submitted with the Honorary Secretary's letter, dated the 3rd March, 1892.

In February and March 1891, the Lieutenant-Governor was addressed by two important Associations—the District Charitable Society and the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association—with the request that he would appoint a Commission to enquire into the poverty and destitution prevalent in Calcutta amongst Europeans and Eurasians, and the various means possible for relieving and checking it. The Lieutenant-Governor, on being made aware of the general propositions on which the applications were based, thought it right to ask a representative Committee of gentlemen, conversant with the question, to enquire into the whole subject; but, at the same time, he deemed it to be his duty to record that he neither committed the Government to accept any new financial responsibilities, nor did he propose that it should attempt to occupy the field of the operations of private charity. His Honour's belief was that it would be found that private charity in Calcutta is sufficient to deal with local destitution, and mainly requires organization and direction; and the conclusions of the Committee show that these views were on the whole fairly correct. Sir Charles Elliott also regarded it as a matter of importance to the administration, that the condition of this portion of the community should be thoroughly and accurately examined, and he was desirous of having it ascertained whether pauperism is developing among the class of the community under consideration, and, if so, at what rate it is increasing.

2. The Committee have furnished Government with a valuable report, for which the Lieutenant-Governor has already expressed his acknowledgments. They have spared no pains in arriving at the facts; and the Government is now in possession of information which will always be of use as a permanent record of the present state of affairs, as well as for reference and comparison in the future. It remains now to give some account of the method pursued in this investigation, to examine the recommendations of the Committee, to state the conclusions at which the Lieutenant-Governor has arrived, and the action which His Honour deems it possible or impossible for Government to take in attempting to ameliorate the condition and prospects of the Indo-European community.

3. The Committee subdivided their work into five portions, and made over each of these to a Sub-Committee for detailed enquiry and compilation of the information collected. The subjects thus dealt with were—(1) statistics of pauperism in Calcutta; (2) statistics of charities, charitable institutions, and endowments; (3) avenues of employment; (4) amendment of the European Vagrancy Act, IX of 1874; (5) the education, training, and housing of the paupers. The reports of the Sub-Committees have been furnished to Government in extenso, and testify to the thoroughness with which their enquiries were conducted.

4. The subject falls naturally under three main heads—the statistics, the causes, and the remedies, of Indo-European pauperism, using the word in the sense adopted by the Committee, to designate the domiciled European community of Calcutta and Howrah, and the Eurasians of all degrees of mixed blood.

First, then, with regard to the statistics, the following table shows the percentage of paupers which the Committee have found to exist among the Indo-Europeans of Calcutta and Howrah:—

	Europeans.			Eurasians.			Combined.
	Total.	Paupers.	Percentage.	Total.	Paupers.	Percentage.	Total.	Paupers.	Percentage.
Men	4,176	169	4·0	3,195	513	16·0	7,371	682	9·3
Women	3,200	128	4·0	3,572	879	24·6	6,772	1,007	14·9
Children ...	2,868	514	17·9	3,856	983	25·5	6,724	1,497	22·2
Total ...	10,244	811	7·9	10,623	2,375	22·3	20,867	3,186	15·7

Taken as a whole, 7·9 per cent of the Europeans and 22·3 per cent of the Eurasians have been actually traced out by the Committee as being in receipt of charitable relief of some kind or other. The amount of pauperism among Europeans (7·9 per cent of the population) is far larger than what is believed to be the amount of similar destitution in England, even after making a full allowance for the extent to which public charity is supposed to supplement poor-law relief; but the percentage of 22·3 among the Eurasians is an enormous percentage, which, as the Committee observe, can scarcely be paralleled in any other community in the world. A specially discouraging feature is the large proportion of married women, and the still larger proportion of children (47 per cent. of the whole number of paupers), who are in receipt of charity.

5. Secondly, having shown the existence of this excessive pauperism—an inheritance from the special conditions of the British occupation of India—the Committee proceed to analyse its causes, which may be briefly stated to be increasing competition for employment on the part of natives of the country, defects of character and temperament, and mal-administration of charitable relief. There is no difficulty in tracing the rise and growth of native competition. The Indo-European community originally held almost all subordinate posts in the public service which required a knowledge of English, and were employed on all similar work in offices connected with English trade and commerce. But the result of the educational system of Government, especially among the Hindus of Lower Bengal, has been to create a class daily increasing in number of well-qualified Bengalis, capable of filling all minor clerical posts, whose competition is rendered the more dangerous by the fact that they can afford to accept a smaller remuneration for their services. Taking as a fair illustration the appointments to public offices under the Bengal Government during the last twenty years (from the year 1870 to 1890), the Committee observe that the number of Indo-Europeans on salaries of Rs. 100 to Rs. 300 has diminished from 101 to 65; the number of natives of India has increased from 120 to 191; while, as regards appointments under Rs. 100, the number of Indo-Europeans has remained stationary at 92, the number of natives of India has increased from 871 to 1,098. As regards higher appointments, the great majority of those in the gift of Government are open through the door of examination to all alike. That domiciled Europeans and Eurasians have been distanced in the race, the following figures will show—

(i) Deputy Magistrates and Collectors—

	Indo-European.	Native	Percentage of Indo-Europeans.
1862 ...	67	145	31·6
1870 ...	53	142	27·2
1880 ...	42	176	19·3
1890 ...	35	261	11·8

(ii) Subordinate Judges and Munsifs—

1862 ...	23	56	29·1
1890 ...	...	255	Nil

If Indo-Europeans desire to improve their position in this respect, they must educate themselves up to the point which is required for the service of the State; Government can do nothing more than see that Europeans and Eurasians domiciled in India receive fair treatment, equally with other persons included in the term "natives of India."

6. But if Indo-Europeans are driven out of the field they formerly occupied, it is hardly possible that they can find any place among the labouring population below. The prevailing rate of wages is an absolute impediment to such a change of their manner of living. The poorer Europeans and Eurasians are living already on the margin of existence. If they can find employment in their own sphere, they obtain a bare subsistence: if employment fails, there is no lower industrial stratum into which they can be received, and they fall at once into pauperism, and become dependent on charity. It is true that the development of Railway enterprise has afforded occupation to many, but it cannot of itself continue to support an increasing population, though it will encourage commercial activity in other directions, and open up new avenues to the industrious.

7. The third cause of the excessive pauperism among Indo-Europeans lies in the defects of character, which impede and weaken them in the struggle for existence. It is not necessary here to recapitulate what the Committee have said as to these defects, which they attribute partly to the pride of race engendered in those who inherit the blood of the English and Portuguese conquerors, and partly to the enervating effects of the climate and home influences. The correction of such defects is the work of parents and teachers and ministers of religion, and it is not within the scope of Government to intervene, otherwise than indirectly, to amend them; moreover there are sufficient instances of Indo-Europeans, who by force of character and steady conduct have raised themselves to positions of high trust and emolument, to show that these failings are not irremediable.

8. A fourth cause of the prevailing pauperism has been found in the injudicious administration of charitable relief, the demoralising effects of which, and its tendency to increase rather than diminish the number of paupers, are too well known to the political economist to require detailed comment here. The Sub-Committee has brought together a great deal of information on this head, which it will be useful to summarise and to publish. They divide the charities into four main classes. First, the Charitable Societies, four in number: the District Charitable Society, the Society of St. Vincent dePaul, the Society of Friends of Foreigners in distress, and the Women's Friendly Society. The first two mainly give relief in food, money doles and monthly allowances; the third help foreigners to leave the country, and the fourth provides employment and shelter for young women. Their united funds, excluding what is spent on natives of India, are about Rs. 86,000; there is no information as to the number who receive relief, except at the Almshouse, where the inmates were 127 on 31st December 1890. The second class is that of charitable homes; there are five of these, mostly for women and children; the numbers received on the 31st December 1890 were 265, and the expenditure of the year Rs. 56,000. The third class consists of the Boarding Schools and the endowments in behalf of education. There are seven such schools, the income of which in 1890, excluding fees paid by pupils, was Rs. 1,73,000; the income from seven educational endowments comes to Rs. 41,000. These schools had 1,179 scholars on their rolls on 31st December 1890, of whom 870 (363 boys and 507 girls) were wholly free. The fourth class consists of charitable endowments; four of these are devoted to debtors and criminals, and the income is mainly though not entirely spent on natives of India; of the class devoted to general charitable objects among Indo-Europeans there are 21 (see page xxxv) with an income of about Rs. 40,000, exclusive of those administered by the District Charitable Society and taken into account in estimating its income. The interest on these endowments is expended almost entirely on pensions and small doles. The Sub-Committee point out that there is no surer method of manufacturing pauperism than the distribution of these small doles; and as far as the report shows the facts, there seems to be nothing to prevent the same person from being at one and the same time an inmate of one of the homes in class 2, a recipient of doles from several societies and endowments in classes 1 and 4, and also having his or her children educated free at one of the schools in class 3. Anyhow it is clear that, against the 3,186 paupers shown in paragraph 7, free schooling and board is provided for 870 children, and the Almshouse and charitable homes accommodate 392. There remains a balance of 1,924 paupers, for whose benefit funds exist in the hands of Charitable Societies or of the Managers of endowments, to the amount of about Rs. 11,05,000, or nearly Rs. 54 per head. These figures do not include the very considerable relief afforded by the hospitals and their endowments. It is evident therefore that the existing Charitable Funds of Calcutta are sufficient to meet even the present congested demand for relief; and it cannot be doubted that, if they are properly organized, not only will pauperism be diminished, but distress can be absolutely stamped out. The principles advocated by the Committee are that the condition of idle paupers should be made less eligible than that of the independent poor, that indoor relief should be the rule and outdoor relief the exception, and that relief in aid of wages should be, if possible, avoided.

9. Coming to the third main head, the remedies by which the Committee propose to counteract the prevailing tendencies in the direction of an ever-increasing pauperism fall under two categories—(i) the opening up of new sources of employment, and (ii) the better organization of charitable relief.

(i) Two schemes have been recommended by the Committee for the provision of employment: firstly, the formation of an Indo-European Regiment, with the corollary that "State railways and other departments which are large employers of labour should make such arrangements as will provide a career for well-behaved and industrious time-expired soldiers;" and secondly, the establishment of a training-ship in the Hooghly.

(ii) To promote the better organization of charity, the Committee recommend the formation of a Charity Organization Committee under the presidency of a Superintendent of Calcutta Charities, to be selected by Government.

10. The Committee considered and rejected the proposal to ask for increased legal power for the repression of mendicancy. They found that section 70, Act IV (B.C.) of 1866 (the Calcutta Police Act), gave ample power to put it down in the streets of Calcutta, and they desired that attention should be called to the existence of this provision as well as that of section 109 of the Criminal Procedure Code, under which security can be taken for good behaviour from any vagrant who has no ostensible means of support. They did not see their way to make any practical recommendation in favour of building houses in Calcutta suitable for occupation by the poorer classes of Indo-Europeans, or in favour of a scheme which was put before them for promoting emigration at a very early age to Australia.

11. Turning now to the first of the two schemes mentioned above—the formation of an Indo-European Regiment—the Committee are doubtless right in holding that military discipline would be of the greatest advantage to young men of this class, and that many of its members have distinguished themselves and have shown the best qualities of soldiers when opportunity has been given them. The main difficulty appears to be the financial one. The Lieutenant-Governor is prepared to recommend to the Government of India the formation of a Eurasian regiment, on the understanding that it takes the place of a native, not an English, regiment in the present army. Whatever capacity individuals may develop, it cannot be contended that at present, or within any appreciable time, such a regiment could as a whole be looked on for the purposes of fighting as the equivalent of a British regiment, and placed in the first line on the North-Western Frontier in case of war. But it might take the place of a native regiment, might do cantonment and garrison duties, and by degrees, if tested in small engagements and proved trustworthy, might take a high rank among the fighting material of the empire.

12. But the cost of creating such a regiment would be serious. The following figures compare the cost of maintaining a British or Native Regiment of Infantry.

British Infantry Regiment.

	Per mensem. Rs.	Per annum. Rs.
Officers (29)	10,294	1,23,526
Non-Commissioned Officers (104) ...	4,054	48,639
Privates (880) at Rs. 18-9-6	16,363	1,96,344
Allowances, &c.		31,817
Total		4,00,326

Native Infantry Regiment.

	Per mensem.	Per annum.
	Rs.	Rs.
Officers (9)	3,572	42,864
Non-Commissioned Officers (112) ...	2,232	26,784
Sepoys 800 at Rs. 7	5,600	67,200
Allowances, &c.	...	24,492
Total ...	...	1,61,340

For such a regiment as is contemplated, the number of officers attached to a native regiment would probably be sufficient, but the pay of Non-Commissioned officers and privates would correspond to the figures for a British regiment. The cost of a Eurasian regiment may therefore be estimated thus—

	Rs.
Officers (9)	42,864
Non-Commissioned Officers (104)	48,639
Privates (800)	1,78,500
Allowances (as in a native regiment)	24,492
Total	2,94,495

The regiment would therefore cost Rs. 1,33,155 more, or about 80 per cent. more than a native regiment, the place of which it would take, and this, until the fighting powers of Eurasians are proved to be superior to those of sepoys, would be the subsidy which the Imperial Government would have to pay if it agreed to substitute a Eurasian for a native regiment.

13. If the formation of the regiment is sanctioned by the Government of India, the Lieutenant-Governor agrees with the Committee that the boys should be taken straight from school, being at once drafted into a training battalion for the purpose of being drilled, and required to enlist for a certain number of years. In that case the free schools and orphanages, which grant a free education to a large proportion of Indo European children, should so arrange as to contemplate a military career for a number of their students. The students of other schools should be allowed to enlist in the same way, and the same opening should also be offered to all schools out of Calcutta. By this arrangement a company a year could probably be created, in which case it would take eight years to raise a complete regiment. His Honour would not, however, recommend drafting the young soldiers into one or more battalions on active service, as suggested by the Committee. In his opinion they should be kept together in one regiment, whose head-quarters might be either at Calcutta or Barrackpore. A copy of the Committee's report will be laid before the Government of India, whose attention will be particularly invited to the Committee's proposal for the formation of an Indo-European regiment.

14. The idea of establishing a training-ship on the river Hooghly for Indo-European boys who are willing to adopt a seafaring life has been previously before this Government. The following is an extract from a letter No. 709 Marine, dated 29th March 1889, of the Joint Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the Public Works Department, to the Honorary Secretary of the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association :—

> Lastly, there is the question of establishing a training-ship, and in regard to this, I am to invite the Association's attention to the remarks of the Public Service Commission and the evidence received by that body. Although anxious to assist by every means in his power the class in which your Association is interested, the Lieutenant-Governor fears that a training-ship in the Hooghly would not be a success, even if a large sum were spent on its establishment and maintenance. The conditions out here are, from every point of view, less favourable for the establishment and maintenance of such an institution than in England, where every year a very large number of boys commence a seafaring life. The maintenance of a training-ship under suitable supervision, and with competent instructors, would be costly; and unless the apparent unwillingness of boys brought up in this country to go to sea were removed, the objects to be gained by maintaining a training ship would be very small in comparison with the expense to be incurred.
> Your Board appears to be of a different opinion, and before the Lieutenant-Governor can move further in the matter of establishing a training-ship, I am to ask that a definite scheme may be submitted, and some indication given of the ability of those concerned to carry it out, and of the standard of training that they hope to obtain.

15. As no definite scheme had been previously submitted, the Sub-Committee on Education, Training and housing in a supplementary note pages lxxxvii and lxxxviii, examined the proposal of a training-ship in detail, and suggested that the Government of India be asked to obtain from the Admiralty authorities in England the gift of a suitable hulk or vessel to be fitted and sent out to Calcutta to be used as a training-ship: and that Government be asked to contribute to the training of destitute European and Eurasian boys the same sum per head that native boys in reformatories cost to the State. Their estimate of the cost of educating and maintaining 250 boys in a training vessel in the Hooghly is as follows:—

Staff.

	Rs.
Commander	350
Teacher of Navigation	150
Ditto Seamanship	120
Six masters of classes from 50 to 100	450
Doctor	50
Matron	50
Total ...	1,170

Maintenance.

	Rs.
Dieting charges, including servants (@ 4 annas per diem)	1,875
Clothing	375
Washing	40
Medicines	25
Lighting	15
	2,330
Total monthly ...	3,500
Annually ...	42,000

This estimate gives an average cost of Rs. 168 per annum: and it is observed that if the actual cost (Rs. 8,400) be recovered in fees from 50 boys, who are able to pay to be trained in the higher class of officers, it will leave Rs. 33,600 to be provided annually by Government and by contributions, or to be recovered in part from the labour of the boys

16. This estimate appears to the Lieutenant-Governor to be unduly sanguine both as to the number of boys for whom it will be possible to find employment as sailors, and as to the cost of their food and training. In order to obtain a skilled and independent opinion on the subject, the Lieutenant-Governor requested Captain Petley, Port Officer of Calcutta, to favour him with a statement of what he considers to be the lowest possible estimate of the cost of the education on a training-ship of 50 boys, say at the age of 16, to be turned out as ordinary seamen at the age of 17. This has been furnished as follows:—

Monthly Account.

	Rate of pay	Messing	Total monthly.
	Rs.	Rs. A. P.	Rs.
1 Commander	500	30 0 0	530
1 Mate	250	30 0 0	280

Lavatory gear (soap, &c) ...	10	.....	10
Lighting, medicine, coal and general up-keep of vessels	200	.....	200
Total		105 8 0	2,531

or Rs 30,408 per annum.

Yearly Account.

		Rs. A. P.	Rs. A. P.

			7 8 0	× 50 = 375
Clothes ...		.....	33 8 0	× 50 = 1,675, or Rs. 2,050 per annum.

Totals.

	Rs.
Annual expenditure per monthly account ...	30,408
Ditto per yearly do. ...	2,050
Total ...	32,458

The cost of each boy would therefore be—

	Rs. A. P.
Yearly	649 2 6
Monthly	54 1 6

exclusive of medical attendance.

This estimate may be somewhat high, and certainly the cost of food ought not to amount to eight annas per diem; but it is essential on a training-ship to secure a competent staff, men of high principles and character, to train the boys. But even supposing that Captain Petley's estimate could be materially reduced, his yearly estimate of cost, Rs. 649 per head, could not be nearly brought down to the estimate of Rs. 168 per head arrived at by the Sub-Committee. In Captain Petley's opinion the hulk required should not be less than 600 tons in size for sanitary reasons, and should be completely equipped with masts, sails, rigging, furniture, boats, gear, models, and general internal fittings.

17. Possibly, however, a cheaper kind of training might suffice, such as is tried and found useful, according to information supplied to the Lieutenant-Governor, in a well known charitable home in England, where the semblance of a deck is constructed in the ground, and masts and rigging are erected with the use of which the boys are made familiar. Sir Charles Elliott is, however, quite unable to say how far such elementary training as this would go towards giving the required experience and teaching the boys to be useful on shipboard.

18. There remains the question how far there is any reasonable probability that youths so trained will obtain employment on the ships of the Indian Marine, or on those which are specially engaged in Indian trade. It would be essential (with reference to the proviso in the Shipping Act to this effect,) that the people who engage them should guarantee to provide a return passage to India, and that they should not be subject to the risk of being discharged in ports in England or on the Continent; and the Lieutenant-Governor has applied to some of the most experienced gentlemen engaged in the shipping trade in Calcutta for their views on the probable extent to which an opening of this kind for the labour of Eurasians can be found.

The general outcome of the opinions expressed by the gentlemen consulted is to the effect that it is doubtful whether employment could subsequently be found either as seamen or as ship apprentices for a class of Indo-European boys trained in the manner proposed. Occupation might, it is thought, be without difficulty found for them either in menial posts about ships such as are at present undertaken in many cases by Indo-Portuguese, or as "seacunnies" on steamers which carry no European quartermasters, provided of course that they would consent to take up such employment and could be trained to a fair knowledge of the way about a ship and to accustom themselves to proper discipline. Their employment on sailing ships would depend entirely on whether they could be so trained as to compare favourably with Europeans, and it seems doubtful whether any training imparted purely on a ship on the river could turn out really efficient seamen of a standard such as can be met with in western countries. It has been suggested, however, that this might be remedied by supplementary training in the Indian Marine or Pilot ships, after leaving the training ship.

The Shipping Master's Report for 1891-92 shows that during that year the following numbers were shipped and discharged in Calcutta:—

	Shipped.	Discharged.
Eurasians	68	44
Goanese	230	294

The Goanese, he adds, all bear Portuguese names, but it is doubtful whether they are a mixed race. Both Eurasians and Goanese chiefly form the saloon crews of the steamers of the British India and other Companies, but not a single Eurasian or Goanese is a lascar or fireman, as the serangs being all Muhammadans invariably refuse to accept Eurasian lads as stoker or lascar boys. A few Eurasians, however, are officers and engineers in the steamers. These facts illustrate what has been said above as to the prospects of boys of this class obtaining employment on ships or steamers sailing from Calcutta.

It must be confessed that the outlook does not seem very promising, but if the training can be cheaply given it might be worth while to try the experiment.

19. The Lieutenant-Governor observes that the Committee has not taken into consideration the opportunities offered by the Sibpur College for the useful and remunerative employment of Eurasians in the engineering industries of this country. For many years past the inducements held out to poorer Eurasians to train their children as mechanics at Sibpur have not attracted this class to the full extent even of the stipends offered: at the present time there are a large number of vacancies on the Reduced Fee list of the Sibpur College, election to which secures, at a cost of Rs. 5 a month, a training fitting an apprentice to become a Foreman Mechanic. That fuller use of these advantages has not been made is probably due to the fact that their existence is not generally known. The passed Eurasian apprentices have hitherto been able to secure remunerative employment, and it appears to the Lieutenant-Governor desirable that the attention of the Indo-European community should be specially drawn to this opportunity of training their children for a useful and honorable career. It might be suggested to the Managers of the Calcutta Schools in which the youths of this class are educated that they should open special classes for training boys up to the Entrance standard of the Sibpur College. This standard is not a high one, but the Lieutenant-Governor has been informed that it is sufficiently high to have kept boys out of the College who would otherwise have joined. This would point to the desirability of opening a lower or artisan class in the College, and the Principal will be instructed to consider the question if a sufficient number of applications for admission to such a class are made to him.

20. Under the second of their two constructive heads the Committee make some far-reaching proposals for the organization of private charity. They consider that the District Charitable Society should take as its proper function the relief of all destitute Indo-Europeans, maintaining the Almshouse under stricter discipline than at present, and coupled with a labour test for indoor relief, and providing outdoor relief under exceptional circumstances for cases where the insistance on indoor relief would injuriously break up families. A separate ward should be provided for infirm men permanently incapacitated for work, and similar provision should be made for women by subsidising existing institutions. The way would thus be cleared to invite all other charities to confine themselves to relieving the young and the sick, and those cases where destitution is due to misfortune, not to faults; to stop pensions or periodical doles to persons capable of working, and to give charitable aid only in such a way as to restore the recipient, if able-bodied, to a position of independence. A separate "Charity Organization Society" should be constituted, to consist of the delegates from all these private charities as well as from the District Charitable Society, and to assist them in working harmoniously together. Its function would be to investigate cases of destitution and to decide which class they fall under, whether the class on which the District Charitable Society operates, or the class to which private charity is suitable; to see that the same person does not get relief from two or three charities, and that the professional beggar is discouraged. The President of this Society should be, the Committee think, a Government official of standing and influence, who would give his services gratuitously to the work. By such means, the Committee hope "the persons who can really be benefited by relief and restored to self-dependence, and those who are deserving objects of charity as suffering from permanent infirmities, may be separated from the undeserving, and the latter put under the pressure of strict and uncongenial discipline so as to make them prefer work to idleness."

21. The Lieutenant-Governor believes that these suggestions contain in them the germs of a great reform which may, if properly worked out, so utilise the charitable resources of Calcutta as to abolish pauperism and remove from poverty its degrading and lowering influences. But they can only be worked out by the voluntary co-operation of the managers of endowments and charitable institutions and of the benevolent public. There is no room for Government action in the matter, and all the assistance that the Lieutenant-Governor can give is to express his general approval of the plan, to sketch out how the scheme can be most practically carried out, and to suggest how to meet the most obvious difficulties.

22. It appears to His Honour that there is no necessity for creating a new Central Society with executive or investigating duties attached to it. The establishment of any new Society implies the employment of a new set of benevolent persons, who will give their services voluntarily to charitable objects. Such persons are not too numerous, and it is better to concentrate, not to dissipate their energies. It seems possible to use the District Charitable Society, with a little alteration, to fill the position marked out. Its President is a Government officer of high rank and influence, such as the Committee have desired to see placed at the head of their Charity Organisation Society, and the Lieutenant-Governor trusts that he would consent to retain his position if the scope of the Society is widened according to these suggestions. It deals with the whole of the pauperism of the place, and has divided Calcutta geographically, according to its parishes: each parish has a District Committee which corresponds with the General Committee, and the funds are administered with no preference for any sect or denomination. The Society is not exclusively Church of England, as the Secretary, the District Committee of St. Andrew's parish, and some of the members of the Executive Committee belong to other Christian Churches, and there is a separate Native Committee for the administration of relief to natives of India, but the District Committees through whom enquiry is made and relief is granted are, with the exception of St. Andrews,' the Church of England Vestries of the Parishes. What would be necessary in order to turn the District Charitable Society into a Central Charity Organisation Society would be to have a Central Committee comprising members of all denominations and the managers of the Societies, Homes, and endowments, which it is desired to bring into co-operation. The present geographical limits of districts might continue, but the District Committees should be representatives of Anglican, Roman Catholic, Scotch and all other Christian Churches. They would enquire into all cases of distress within the district, and would report to the Central Committee. Rules would be laid down according to which all destitute persons would be divided into two classes: those who ought to be relieved by the District Charitable Society, or those who may be suitably relieved by private institutions. For instance, if a houseless person requires shelter, the Committee would decide whether he (if a male) should be sent to the Almshouse of the District Charitable Society subject to the test of performing his task of work, or, if a female, to any charitable home such as the St. Vincent's Home or St. Mary's House of Charity, subsidized by the District Society; or whether he or she might be a suitable inmate for any other institution mentioned on page xli of the Report, such as the "Home of the Little Sisters of the Poor" or the "Lawrence DeSouza Home." If, again, the applicant has a home and family and requires relief, the Central Committee would decide whether he or she should be required to submit to some test of work, or should be relieved by the Anglican Vestry or any of the Roman Catholic or other Societies or endowments referred to above (in paragraph 8) as in the first or fourth class of charities. But if the District Charitable Society's obligations are increased by taking over the whole of one class of paupers, many of whom are now assisted by private charities, it follows that its funds should be proportionately increased by contributions from those charities which are relieved of a portion of their pensioners. The following requisites seem, therefore, to be essential in order to carry out the Committee's proposals :—

1. The District Charitable Society must associate with itself members and representatives of all sections of the Christian religion, as well as managers of, or delegates from, private funds and charities.
2. The Central Committee must agree to lay down certain canons, dividing applicants for relief into two classes: those who should be assisted by the District Charitable Society proper, and those who may receive aid from private societies: these classes would roughly be the undeserving and the deserving paupers.
3. So far as additional obligations are thrown on the District Charitable Society by this classification, so far the private charities must agree to help it by a contribution from their own funds.
4. A record would be kept by the Central Committee of the history of each applicant, and of what relief he receives from whatever source affiliated to the Committee, so that he should not be living simultaneously on two or three pensions given by different charities; and, if found to be unworthy, should be refused relief by them all.

23. There can be no doubt that the charitable endowments in Calcutta are large and liberal, and they are probably sufficient in themselves to meet all distress in the town; but if mismanaged and allowed to overlap, they promote deception and encourage extravagance. The organization of the several endowments, so as to induce them to occupy each its own field and work together to a common end, is therefore very important, and it is hoped that it may be found possible to carry it out in the manner which has been sketched in these sentences.

Explanation.— . indicates that no rain has fallen. If the return for any day has not been received, the corresponding space is left blank. If any of the returns are wanting, the corresponding spaces in the total rainfall columns are left blank. With reference to the column of rainy days, the definition of a rainy day is when at least 0·1 inch of rain has fallen.

CALCUTTA, the 9th August 1892.

SUMMARY OF THE METEOROLOGICAL AND RAINFALL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN BENGAL, AND OF THE METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN ASSAM, FOR THE WEEK ENDING 8 A.M., SATURDAY, THE 6TH OF AUGUST 1892.

On the last day of the previous week a feeble barometric depression, which had existed for some days in the north-west angle of the Bay, had passed inland. Hence with the disappearance of the feeble depression a moderate monsoon current began again to flow in over Bengal, and the rainfall reported on July 31st, or the first day of the week under review, was rather more general than it had been, though considerable parts of the west of the province still received no rain. On this day also pressure began to fall moderately, the fall being largest in Bihár, but the general pressures were still in very decided excess of the normal, the excess averaging nearly a tenth of an inch at the eastern stations, and equalling about half this in the west of the province. On the 1st the barometric changes were small, but the area of rainfall had considerably extended, and it was general over the greater part of the province. On the 2nd pressure had fallen over the whole province, the fall being largest in the south-eastern districts, where in some cases it almost equalled a tenth of an inch, and the general pressure became slightly in defect of the normal. On this day rainfall was therefore general over the whole province, the falls in North Bengal and North Bihár being heavy, and the monsoon current was flowing freely over the province. On the 3rd pressure had continued to fall in the west of the province, but it had commenced to rise at the eastern stations; but again rainfall was general over the whole province, and the falls were heavy in South Bihár and Central and Western Bengal, and on this day the monsoon conditions were strongly developed over the province. On the 4th a further increase of pressure took place, the increase being largest in the north-east of the province, and pressure was generally slightly in excess of the normal. The monsoon conditions were still very pronounced, and general rain was again received, the falls being heavy in the west of the province, but the tendency was for the falls to become lighter generally. A further moderate to rapid increase of pressure took place on the 5th, and pressure became considerably in excess of the normal, the excess equalling about an eighth of an inch at the eastern stations, and from 0·06″ to 0·08″ in the west of the province. Hence the monsoon conditions began to fall off in force to some extent, though from the 4th to the 5th rain was again general, and rather heavy falls were received in Bihár. On the 6th, or the last day of the week, pressure had fallen slightly at the western stations, but it still continued to rise at the central and eastern stations, and the excess pressure over the east of the province equalled about a seventh of an inch. Hence conditions became still more unfavourable, and though the rain reported from the 5th to the 6th was still fairly general, yet the amounts were much lighter than they had been. The general conditions at the close of the week were therefore becoming very distinctly favourable for a partial break in the rains.

Pressure—Has been decidedly in excess of the normal over the greater part of the province, the excess averaging about 0·05″ to 0·06″ in Orissa, South-West Bengal, East and North Bengal, and Assam, but it has been much smaller than this in Bihár, and does not average more than 0·02″ or 0·03,″ while in the extreme west of Bihár, at such stations as Dehri, Gaya, and Bankipore, pressure is almost normal.

Temperature.—The variations of temperature during the week have been unimportant, and the mean temperature has been below the normal in all the divisions of the province, except Chota Nagpur where temperature has been nearly normal, by between one and two degrees. For the whole province the mean defect is almost exactly one degree, while in Assam the general defect is 2°.

Rainfall.—North Bengal has received an average fall of five inches, or an inch and-a-half in excess of the normal; South Bihár has received four and-a-fifth inches, or an inch and-a-third more than usual for the period; and South-West Bengal reports an average fall of three and-a-half inches, or about half an inch in excess. In all other divisions the falls are more or less in defect of the normal. The defect is, however, very small in Chota Nagpur which has received a little more than three inches, while East Bengal, which has received three and a-half inches is more than half an inch in defect. North Bihár has received an average fall of 2·79 inches, or a third of an inch less than usual, and Orissa only two inches, or two-thirds of an inch in defect of the normal. The defect is, therefore, largest in Orissa, where it equals 34 per cent. for the week. On the whole, the falls in the various smaller districts have been fairly equally distributed except, perhaps, in parts of Bihár, where the falls in parts of Darbhanga, Muzaffarpur, Monghyr, and Sonthal Parganas have been comparatively small.

The following table gives the summary of the temperature and rainfall data of each of the seven meteorological divisions of the province for the week ending Saturday, the 6th of August 1892:—

The results of observations at the Alipore Observatory are not rigorously comparable with the registers of past years (at the Park Street Observatory). The barometer is about 8 feet higher at Alipore, and, other things being equal, reads therefore ·003 lower. The diurnal range of temperature is also greater at Alipore, and the mean temperature apparently about 0·6° higher; and, finally, the thermometer which furnished the record of temperature at the Surveyor-General's Office during 20 years and upwards is found to read 0·6 higher than the Kew standard thermometer, which is the standard of reference at the present Observatory.

The mean pressure, temperature, &c., are deduced from the traces of the Barograph and Thermograph and from observations made at 6h, 10h, 16h and 22h.

The maximum and minimum temperatures are obtained from self-registering thermometers. All the thermometers are verified, and the readings have been corrected to a standard constructed and verified at the Kew Observatory. They are exposed under a thatched shed open at the sides, and are suspended four feet above the ground.

The barometer readings are corrected approximately to those of the standard, Newman's No. 86, formerly at the Surveyor-General's Office.

The hygrometric elements are obtained from Tables III, IV, and V of the official tables computed in the Meteorological Office, and based on Regnault's modifications of August's formula.

The directions and the movement of the wind are taken from the trace of a Beckley's anemograph.

The mouth of the rain-gauge is one foot above the ground.

o, overcast; g, gloomy; d, drizzling rain; p, passing temporary showers; t, thunder.

OFFICE OF SANITARY COMMISSIONER FOR BENGAL,
The 8th August 1892.

W. H. GREGG, Dip. Publ. Health, Camb.,
Sanitary Commissioner for Bengal.

MEMORANDUM.

First Quarterly review of births and deaths registered in the several districts and in 61 selected towns in the Province of Bengal during the quarter ending 31*st March* 1892.

The delay in publishing the following statistics is due to the difficulty experienced in getting together the figures of births, the registration of which was reintroduced in rural areas from the 1st January 1892. Now that the complete system of registration is in fairly good working order, the figures may be expected to be supplied to this office promptly in future, which will enable me to publish these reviews earlier.

Districts.

Births.—The total number of births registered in the forty-six districts of Bengal excluding Darjeeling, from which no return has yet been received, during the period under review amounted to 541,285, corresponding to an annual rate of 30·84 per 1,000 of the aggregate population, which is 10 per thousand less than the probable actuals, 40 per thousand being the assumed birth-rate of this country. As birth registration which was originally introduced in Bengal in 1876 was discontinued in 1878, owing to the very imperfect results attained, there are no figures of previous quarters to compare with the quarter under review. It is interesting, however, to note, as a sign of great improvement in the present day, that while in 1876 the birth-rate of Bengal was returned at 14·65 per mille, it is now returned at 30·84, and I have no doubt that further improvement will soon be shown, as the people are beginning to realise the importance of registration, and the officials entrusted with the duty are taking more interest in the subject.

Births according to Sex.—282,635 male and 258,650 female births were recorded, the proportion being 109 males to every 100 females.

Results of Birth registration.—The following table shows the birth-rate of each district in order of sequence; also the excess of births over deaths, and the excess of deaths over births :—

Mortality.—The total number of deaths (exclusive of still-births) registered in the Province during the period under review amounted to 635,463, against 604,858 in the preceding quarter, the annual ratios corresponding to 36·12 and 34·36 respectively per 1,000 of the population. The rate of the quarter under review is 14·96 higher than the mean rate of the corresponding quarter of the past five years (1887—91), and also higher than the rate of the corresponding quarter of any of the past five years, vide figures below :—

From cholera, Jessore suffered most severely during the quarter under review, the mortality having been 12·08 per mille; Nadia and Backergunge come next with a death-rate of 12·04 each, then Balasore 10·64, Cuttack 10, 24-Parganas 9·40, Murshidabad 7·84, Howrah 7·12, Burdwan 6·36, Midnapore 4·68, Faridpur 4·48, Chittagong 4·16, Khulna 4, Puri 3·92, Dacca 3·28, Tippera 3·20, Birbhum 2·96, Noakhali 2·96, Bankura 2·64, Serampore 2·16, and Hooghly 2·12.

From small-pox, Cuttack suffered most severely, the mortality having been 5·16 per mille; Puri comes next with a death-rate of 3·88 per mille, then Midnapore 3·16 and Lohardaga 2·12.

The mortality from fever was highest in Jessore, where it reached 58·24 per mille (more than three-fourths of the total deaths in this district were from this cause). Rajshahi comes next with 53·48, followed by Dinajpur 45·84, Purnea 45·36, Rangpur 44·92, Malda 44, Jalpaiguri 43·64, Nadia 41·76, Hooghly 38·08, Palámau 34·68, Champaran 34·60, Murshidabad 32·96, Faridpur 32·48, Burdwan 32·04, Birbhum 30·76, Bogra 30·68, Pabna 30·28, Noakhali 30, Midnapore 29·52, Darjeeling 28·84, Khulna 27·84, Serampore 27·04, Monghyr 26·40, Backergunge 26·28, Hazáribágh 25·48, Bhágalpur 24·60, 24-Parganas 23·68, Chittagong and Muzaffarpur 22·76 each, Dacca 22·44, and Bankura 20·92.

Mortality according to Age.—The following statement shows the mortality according to age during the 1st quarter of 1892 :—

	Under 1 year.	1 year and under 5 years.	5 to 10.	10 to 15.	15 to 20.	20 to 30.	30 to 40.	40 to 50.	50 to 60.	60 years and upwards.

As usual, the death-rate among infants under one year of age is highest during the period under review. The number of deaths among children over one year and under five is also very high. I have on several occasions given it as my opinion that these extremely high rates of mortality are principally due to the general insanitary condition of most of the districts of Bengal.

Towns.

Vital statistics.—The total number of births registered in 61 selected towns of the Province during the quarter ending with 31st March 1892 amounted to 13,118, and the total number of deaths to 17,004, against 11,307 and 15,964 respectively in the preceding quarter. These figures represent an annual birth-rate of 27·88 and a death-rate of 36·16 during the 1st quarter of 1892, against 24·04 and 33·96 respectively during the last quarter of 1891. The figures of 1st quarter of 1892 are compared in the following table with those of the preceding quarter, the corresponding quarter of 1891, and the average of five past corresponding periods 1887—91 :—

	RATIO PER MILLE PER ANNUM.				Increase or decrease as compared with preceding quarter.	Increase or decrease as compared with corresponding quarter of 1891.	Increase or decrease as compared with 1887—91.

Deaths	36·16	33·96	24·16	19·56	2·20 I	12·00 I	16·60 I

Births and deaths according to Sex.—It will be seen that both as regards births and deaths the figures of the 1st quarter of 1892 were in excess of the past periods with which they are compared, a result which can only be ascribed to more accurate registration since the work was made over to the police on the 1st January 1892.

The total number and the proportion of male to female births is shown in the following table :—

	SEXES.
	Number of—		Ratio per 1,000 of population per annum.		Number of male to every 100 females.
	Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.
Births	6,838	6,280	14·52	13·36	108
Deaths	9,395	7,609	36·68	35·56	103

Results of registration.—The following table shows in order of sequence the birth and death-rates of the 61 towns. The average rate of the corresponding quarters of the past five years is also given for purposes of comparison :—

Shoal near track recommended—Misima Nada.

THE British Admiralty has given notice (No. 304 of 1892), that the Commander of the U. S. S. Alert reports that, when following the "Track through" Misima Nada (as shown on Admiralty chart No. 83), a sounding of 7 fathoms was obtained near where 25 fathoms or more has heretofore been charted, with the south end of Koai sima bearing W. $\frac{7}{8}$ S., and the south-west point of Itsuki sima N. by W. $\frac{1}{2}$ W., distant $3\frac{1}{10}$ miles. The ship's course was then altered to N. by W. $\frac{1}{2}$ W., and for a distance of about 8 cables, depths of 7 fathoms were found, the water then deepening to 15 fathoms.

Approximate position of south end of shoal: lat. 34° 3′ 55″ N., long. 132° 48′ 20″ E.

NOTE.—As less water may exist on this shoal than above given, Mariners should use caution when navigating in the vicinity. The "Track through" on chart No. 83 has been expunged north-eastward of lat. 34° 1½′ N.

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Council of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, assembled for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, 24 and 25 Vic., Cap. 67.

THE Council met at the Council Chamber on Saturday, the 30th, July, 1892.

Present:

The HON'BLE SIR CHARLES ALFRED ELLIOTT, K.C.S.I., Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, presiding.

The HON'BLE J. T. WOODROFFE, Offg. Advocate-General.

The HON'BLE MAHARAJAH SIR HARENDRA KISHORE SING BAHADUR, K.C.I.E.

The HON'BLE GONESH CHUNDER CHUNDER.

The HON'BLE P. PLAYFAIR.

NEW MEMBER.

The Hon'ble Mr. Playfair took his seat in Council.

LICENSED JUTE WAREHOUSE AND FIRE-BRIGADE BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said :—"Before proceeding to the business of to-day's meeting, I will ask Your Honour's permission to be allowed to move that the name of the Hon'ble Mr. Playfair be added to the Select Committee appointed to consider the Bill for the regulation of Warehouses and the maintenance of a Fire-Brigade. It will, I think, materially assist the deliberations of the Committee if we have the advantage of a member representing the mercantile community on it."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

VILLAGE CHAUKIDARI ACT, 1870, AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton moved that the clauses of the Bill to further amend the Village Chaukidari Act, 1870, be further considered in the form recommended by the Select Committee.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe moved that in sub-section (2) of section 2 (which will now be sub-section (3) owing to the restoration of the sections relating to the selection of the members of the panchayat), there be inserted after the word 'may' the words 'from time to time by an order in writing'; and after the words 'subordinate to him' the words 'of the first class, and by the like order withdraw such delegated powers.' "He said:—In the Bill as amended by the Select Committee, the sub-section stands as follows:—'The District Magistrate may delegate his powers under this Act, either wholly or in part, to any Magistrate subordinate to him.' It is suggested by the Commissioner of Orissa, in his minute on this Bill of the 5th July, 1892, that the delegation should be in writing; and inasmuch as this sub-section is only for the purpose of enabling the District Magistrate to delegate his powers either wholly or in part, it has seemed to me desirable, to avoid all question of the extent of that delegation, that the order should be in writing. There will thus, I think, be avoided all questions of difficulty as to the duties which may be committed to any delegated authority under this section. I bear in mind the observation which fell from Your Honour on the last occasion as to the amount of work which is necessarily cast on the Magistrates in this country, and therefore, although at first sight it would seem undesirable that there should be any delegation, at the same time the administrative necessities of the case require that there must be some delegation. The question is to what extent. Under the Act which this Bill is amending the term 'Magistrate' is defined so as to mean and include a Sub-divisional officer. As far as I have been able to ascertain, by far the great majority of these sub-divisional officers are in possession of powers of the first class. Those who are not possessed of those powers, so far as I can ascertain, seem to fall under two classes. Those of whom the Government have had sufficient experience to justify the withholding from them of powers of the first class, and those who have not had sufficient experience to entitle them to receive the grant of such powers. If the power be limited, as I suggest, to Magistrates possessed of powers of the first class, it would, it seems to me, leave the position of affairs much as it is at present, but with this advantage, that the delegation would only be to those Magistrates who are possessed of full powers. Further there will, in regard to the amended provisions of sub-section (1) relating to the appointment of the panchayat by this amendment, be kept, as far as possible, in the hands of the Magistrate of the District, the important powers by this section vested in him, of appointing three or four, up to the number of five, residents of the village to be the panchayat, and also the supervision, under the rules which may be passed by the Government, of the selection of members of the panchayat under the now restored sub-section (2). In my humble opinion the Magistrate of the District ought to be the first man in the district, and to be the first man in the district he requires to be the man who can do and does do everything. He is the person who should be most in touch with the people of the district, and I think it is therefore desirable that, as far as possible, certainly as regards the important powers we have conferred on the Magistrate of the District under this section, he should be the man who should discharge those duties himself, and if he is by stress of circumstances compelled to delegate his powers, it should be to persons fit in the opinion of the Government to exercise the full powers of a Magistrate of the first class.

"The last portion of the amendment is merely to avoid any difficulty which might arise as to the extent and period of delegation. And I think it very desirable that it should be provided in the law itself that there should be no doubt as to the Magistrate's power to withdraw the delegated power. For these reasons I move this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said:—"I have given my best consideration to the proposal now put forward by the learned Advocate-General, and I may say at once that I am disposed to meet him half way, if not more than half way, by accepting the amendment that the Magistrate should be empowered to delegate his powers to Magistrates of the first class. As the law now stands, the Magistrate of the District is the only officer in the district who has the power of appointing or removing the members of the panchayat. He has no power under the Act to delegate his authority to any subordinate, but the Magistrate is defined to mean a Sub-divisional Magistrate, and it is the Sub-divisional Magistrate who exercises within the limits of his sub-division all the powers which the Act entrusts to Magistrates. This arrangement is practically inconvenient. It is inconvenient that the Magistrate of the District should be compelled himself to discharge duties which in a sub-division are discharged by a sub-divisional officer. There is no reason why the Magistrate of the District should not delegate these powers to a competent subordinate, and I agree with the learned Advocate-General as to the persons to whom the District Magistrate may delegate particular functions.

"But while I accept my hon'ble friend's amendment up to this point, I think that the alteration he suggests in the section will fail to give full effect to what is desirable in the amendment of the law. I think the Magistrate of the district should be empowered to delegate his powers not only to a Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him, but also to any Sub-divisional officer. As a rule, Sub-divisional officers exercise powers of the first class, but they do not always do so, and it would be highly inconvenient to exclude officers under this Act who are not invested with full powers. And now, with Your Honour's permission, I will proceed to discuss the amendment which has been notified in my name, namely, that the Magistrate of the district be empowered to delegate his authority not only to a Magistrate as specified in the section, but also to a District Superintendent of Police. This provision is primarily adopted from the law as I find it, except in the Bombay Presidency."

[The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe rose to order, and asked whether, in the opinion of the President, it was competent to the hon'ble member to bring into the discussion of Mr. Woodroffe's amendment the discussion of an amendment which stands in the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton's name.]

[The Hon'ble the President observed that, unless the Council think the amalgamation of the two amendments would be convenient, it would be better perhaps to keep them separate; or perhaps he should rather say that, unless the Advocate-General agrees to have the question of delegation to the District Superintendent of Police, raised along with the question of delegation to a Magistrate of the first class, it would be better to take them separately. He understood that the Advocate-General wished the two questions to be considered separately, and he would therefore ask the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton to confine his remarks to the amendment now before the Council.]

The Hon'ble Mr Cotton resumed:—"I find some difficulty in voting upon the Advocate-General's amendment as it stands. If the amendment is passed, the section will run thus:—'The Magistrate of the district may from time to time, by an order in writing, delegate his powers under this Act, either wholly or in part, to any Magistrate subordinate to him of the first class.' What I propose to bring before the Council is a somewhat large proposal which will virtually include all that is proposed by the Advocate-General. But as the question stands now upon the amendment of the Advocate-General, I cannot agree to extend the power of delegation to Magistrates of the first class, unless it is also added that the delegation may be to any Sub-divisional officer of any district. I therefore suggest the addition to the amendment of the words 'or to any Sub-divisional Magistrate of the district.'

"There is one other point which I wish to bring before the Council, namely, that such power should not be delegated by the Magistrate of his own motion without the sanction of higher authority. It is no doubt a very important function which we contemplate should be delegated by Magistrates to their subordinates. It is possible, although I think it highly improbable, that these powers may be abused in some cases, and therefore, in order to guard against any risk of abuse, I propose to introduce into this section a further clause which will make the sub-section run thus:—'The Magistrate of the district may from time to time with the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division, by an order in writing, delegate his powers under this Act either wholly or in part to any Magistrate subordinate to him of the first class or to any Magistrate in charge of a sub-division, and may, by like order, withdraw such delegated power.'

"This provision I have adopted from the Bombay Act, which empowers the Magistrate of the district, with the sanction of the Commissioner ('under the direction and control of the Commissioner of Police' are the exact words) to delegate his authority to any Magistrate and also to any District Superintendent of Police. The point which I am now making is that the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division should be required where powers are delegated to subordinate officers."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe said:—"I accept the suggested addition of the words 'with the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division.' And inasmuch as the objection which I had to delegating powers to any other Magistrate than a Magistrate of the first class has been in great measure removed by the restriction the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton proposes, namely, the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division, and as it appears that there are but few Sub-divisional Magistrates who are not possessed of first class powers, I would, with the permission of the Council, accept also the suggested addition of the words 'or to any Magistrate in charge of a sub-division."

The Hon'ble the President then put the amendment as altered and accepted by the Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe, and which would make the sub-section stand as stated above by the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton.

The Motion as thus amended was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton moved that in sub-section (2) of section 2 there be inserted after the words 'Magistrate in charge of a sub-division,' in the amendment just accepted by the Council, the words 'or to the District Superintendent of Police.' He said:—"The effect of this proposal will be that the Magistrate will be empowered to delegate his powers under this Act, with the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division, to the District Superintendent of Police, as well as to a subordinate Magistrate of the first class, &c. The suggestion to empower the District Superintendent of Police in this manner is derived primarily from the procedure adopted in the Bombay Presidency. Under Bombay Act VIII of 1867 relating to the village police, it is declared to be lawful for the Magistrate of the district, with the sanction of the Commissioner of Police, to depute to the District Superintendent of Police any authority which may be exercised by the Magistrate over any village police officer. That is the law in Bombay, and in Bengal the Chutia Nagpur Village Act [VII (B.C.) of 1887] entrusts similar authority to the District Superintendent of Police, and this is in accordance with the history of the administration of the village police in these provinces. In the earliest times of the British Government, that is to say from the time of the Regulations of 1793, it has been laid down by the law that the village police shall be under the control and regulation of the police daroga as he is called in the old Regulations, corresponding to the present Inspector or Sub-Inspector of Police, and in a clause of section 21 of Regulation XX of 1817, which was a law relating both to the police and village police, but which has been superseded by Act VI of 1870 wherever the more recent Act has come into force, it is distinctly declared that the village watchmen are subject to the orders of the police darogas. Well, that Regulation of 1817 is now formally in force in Bengal in all villages where Act VI of 1870 has not been extended. I speak in round numbers, but this old Regulation is still applicable to the relations between the village watch and the police darogas in the case of about 70,000 or 80,000 chaukidars, a very large proportion of the chaukidars in this province, nearly one-half, but not quite. To this very large number of men the Regulation applies. To the Police Sub-Inspector, and therefore to the District Superintendent of Police, who is the officer placed immediately over the Police Sub-Inspector, the village watch is subordinate; he is declared to be subject to their orders and control. Therefore the amendment which I have brought forward, declaring that it shall be competent for the Magistrate to delegate his powers under the Village Chaukidari Act to the District Superintendent of Police, would practically not alter the position of affairs in a large portion of the province. It is quite true that this power, if it is availed of, will alter the relations between the District Superintendent of Police and the village watch in such localities as Act VI of 1870 has been extended to. The Act of 1870 makes no mention of the District Superintendent of Police, and no doubt designedly. At the time that that law was passed the position of the District Superintendent of Police was not clearly defined or understood. The District Superintendent claimed and exercised a position of some independence from the District Magistrate. It was not until a year or two after the passing of this Act that Sir George Campbell declared by executive order that the District Superintendent was the subordinate and the right-hand man of the District Magistrate for executive purposes, and when Act VI of 1870 was passed it was thought expedient that all power and control in regard to the village watch should rest with the Magisterial authorities only, not with the heads of the department. However, there has been some change since those times, and there is now no doubt in the minds of any one as to the exact position and relations between the Magistrate of the district and the District Superintendent. In these circumstances, it was thought it would be administratively convenient to empower the Magistrate of the district to delegate his authority, subject to the sanction of the Commissioner, to the District Superintendent of Police, if he should wish to do so in preference to any Magisterial officer subordinate to him. By such delegation, as I have said, he will be merely giving effect to the principle which underlies all the old Regulations in Bengal with regard to the relations between the village watch and the regular police. At the same time the power, if so delegated, will have a tendency to result in the improved organisation of the village watch, which is one of the main objects of the Bill which I have introduced into this Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe said:—"I feel compelled to vote against the proposed amendment, and it is because it seemed to me to be quite apart from the amendment which has recently occupied the attention of the Council, that I asked that it might be considered separately. It appears to be an amendment which is at variance, entire variance, with the Acts which this Bill has been brought in for the purpose of amending. The Regulation under which the village watchmen were dealt with prior to the Act of 1870, the second portion of section 21 of Regulation XX of 1817, declared that the village watchmen are to be subject to the orders of the police daroga. That section was by section 2 of Regulation VI of 1870 repealed as to all districts to which Act VI of 1870 of this Council extends."

[The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton:—The section of Regulation XX of 1817 was not repealed as to all districts to which Act VI of 1870 might be applied, but to all villages to which the Act shall be extended—a very different thing.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe continued:—"Accepting the verbal criticism, it still remains that there is a distinction which still exists, and which it is the object of this amendment to get rid of. Now I cannot but think that this alteration was introduced for the purpose of giving freer play to the panchayat in the management of village affairs, and one has only to read the report of the Police Commission to see that in a large measure the comparative failure of Act VI of 1870 has been owing to what Mr. McNeile has in his report in 1866 described as police interference not contemplated by the law. It is now sought by this amendment to legalise that very action which, as far as I read this report, has tended to paralyse the intentions of the Legislature, and it is apparently introduced for the purpose of destroying the character which the village police has, as distinguished from that of the regular police. When the Bill of 1870 was brought in by Mr. (afterwards Sir) Rivers Thompson, it proceeded in recognition of the fact that the rural police were a municipal institution, a link between the regular police and the people. It is now intended by this amendment, as far as may be, to destroy that character by subordinating the village chaukidar, and not only the village chaukidar, but also the village panchayat, to the District Superintendent of Police. In this amendment in the way it is introduced there is no limitation. It applies equally to the power of appointing members of the panchayat as to any control over the chaukidars. This is indeed a retrogade step in one sense, and it is an advance in a very dangerous direction in another. Mr. Westmacott, Commissioner of the Presidency Division, in 1891, in his minute on this Bill, says that the 'thána constable appears to be quite as bad as the village chaukidar, and the thána sub-inspector and head-constable as bad as the village panchayat, and the thána system appears to me by no means so good that the absorption of the chaukidar into the thána would improve them: we will gain nothing by making the chaukidari subordinate to the thána sub-inspector.' Now by Act V of 1861, section 47, (the Police Act), it is provided that 'it shall be lawful for the Local Government, in carrying this Act into effect in any part of the territories subject to such Local Government, to declare that any authority which now is or may be exercised by the Magistrate of the district over any village watchman or other village police officer for the purposes of police shall be exercised, subject to the general control of the Magistrate of the district, by the District Superintendent of Police.'

"Under that Act various orders have from time to time been issued by the Local Government, and they were confined to the purposes for which the Act enabled them to be issued, namely, for the purposes of police. So far, therefore, as any control by the District Superintendent over the village watchman for police purposes is concerned, the law as it stands at present is ample. The village watchman occupies a two-fold position in the district. He has duties to perform in relation to the village, and for the well-being of the village he has duties to perform towards the authorities; and that dual position is by law fully recognized and established. But to subordinate the panchayat, which can be done under this amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton, to the District Superintendent of Police, is something which has not been heard of before. It is, in fact, to import into this Act an entirely foreign element. And, as I pointed out to the Council, as far as the control over the chaukidar is concerned for purposes of police, the law gives sufficient authority to the District Superintendent of Police. If, as I believe, the aim and object of this Government is to secure the co-operation of as able and independent a body of men as possible with the Magistrate in matters properly belonging to the village, the introduction of another authority in the person of the District Superintendent of Police would, I submit, not only frustrate that aim, but also prove destructive to a very great extent of the principle of the Act which this Bill has been brought in to amend; and therefore I must record my vote against the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Lambert said:—"This is, I think, the first occasion on which the District Superintendent of Police has been named in any Bill relating to the village chaukidar, and I desire to say a few words regarding the relations that should exist between the office of District Superintendent and the rural police. Under Act VI of 1870 and the two amending Acts, the Magistrate has powers of control over two separate bodies—over the panchayats and over village chaukidars. By the section now under consideration, it is proposed that the Magistrate should be authorised to delegate these powers, wholly or in part, to officers subordinate to him, either to other Magistrates, or to the District Superintendent of Police. The duty of exercising control over the panchayats may, perhaps, be delegated to subordinate Magistrates, more properly than to the District Superintendent. But it seems clear that, subject to the control of the District Magistrate, the proper person to supervise the rural police is the District Superintendent. The omission of all mention of the District Superintendent in the Bill which was framed in 1870, is explained by the Committee which met in 1890. The explanation is that, in 1870, the relations of the Magistrate and the District Superintendent were not very accurately defined, and it was felt that to confer separate powers on the District Superintendent might result in executive inconvenience. This difficulty exists no longer. The District Superintendent is declared to be the assistant of the Magistrate, and thus, when in any district crime is dealt with inefficiently, the District Magistrate and the District Superintendent are the officers who are held responsible. Therefore to debar the Magistrate from delegating his powers of supervision to his assistant, the head of the police, seems unreasonable. From the nature of his duties, the District Superintendent has greater facilities for exercising the supervision needed, and the work more properly devolves on him than on the Magistrate, who has multifarious calls on his time. The reports of the two Committees appointed in 1882 and 1890, to consider the working of the rural police, show that in all districts where Act VI has been worked with any measure of success, the Magistrate of the district has employed the District Superintendent to supervise the rural police. All that is now proposed is that this practice should have the sanction of the law—no real change will be made. And it should be borne in mind that Act VI of 1870 applies only to about 90,000 chaukidars. Out of 170,000 upwards of 70,000 chaukidars are still maintained under Regulation XX of 1817, and by this Regulation chaukidars are declared subordinate to all police darogas. It seems anomalous that in two contiguous districts different systems should be in force in matters affecting the entire criminal administration."

The Hon'ble Mr. Allen said:—"The argument in favour of the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton proceed entirely on one aspect of the case, and that is the necessity for the chaukidars being placed, in the discharge of their duties, under the supervision of the District Superintendent of Police. But that can be done under the provisions of the Police Act of 1861. The Act with which we are concerned at present is not an Act dealing with the functions of the chaukidar after he has been created, but an Act which was passed in order to create the chaukidar, to call into existence those persons who, under the Police Act, immediately on coming into existence, pass under the executive control of the District Superintendent. The amendment which the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton now brings forward proposes to enable the District Magistrate to delegate to the District Superintendent of Police any of his powers under this Act, that is to say, Act VI of 1870 as amended by this Bill. Now the powers of the District Magistrate under Act VI of 1870 are limited to calling into existence the panchayat and to getting rid of them. All other powers under the Act are not powers of the District Magistrate, but powers of the Magistrate.

"It is a little over a year since we met here to pass a Bill which was necessitated by the executive having, in the certificate procedure, treated the Collector of the district and the Collector as one and the same functionary. A decision of the High Court had declared that they were distinct functionaries, and that the Collector was not the Collector of the district, and that the Collector of the district was not the Collector. Therefore if this amendment passes, we may have some decision declaring that vesting the District Superintendent with powers of the District Magistrate does not give him the powers of the Magistrate, and yet the District Magistrate has no particular powers given to him throughout all the sections of the Act, except in two. The rest are worded as for 'Magistrate.' The word 'Magistrate' is defined, and in Act VI of 1870, as amended by the Act of 1886, there are only two sections where the words 'Magistrate of the district' occur. Section 3 runs:—'It shall be lawful for the Magistrate of the district,' &c, to appoint the panchayat. And the other section is section 10 giving him power to remove any member. In this Bill as amended by the Select Committee, some further powers are given to the District Magistrate; for instance, he may, by order in writing, declare any local area or group of dwellings to be a village. These are apparently the only powers reserved for the District Magistrate under the Act as amended by our Bill, and I cannot see that there is any necessity that these powers should be transferred to the District Superintendent of Police. All powers of control over the chaukidar, in the matter of investigating crime and preventing crime, can be given to the District Superintendent of Police under the Act of 1861. I therefore think that the passing of the amendment in its present form may lead to confusion. If it is desired to persist in the amendment, it should be provided, not that the powers of the District Magistrate may be delegated to the District Superintendent, but the powers of a Magistrate. That is for the Council to decide. I for myself cannot see that there is any good reason for it."

The HON'BLE MR. RISLEY said:—"I will not attempt to follow the Hon'ble Mr. Allen on the legal point which he has raised. I wish merely to state to the Council the practical reasons which justify the motion now put before them to enable the Magistrate of the district to delegate his powers under this Act to the District Superintendent of Police. The justification of the motion is to be found in my view in the very material difference that exists between Bengal and all or most other provinces of India in respect of the agency at the disposal of the district officer for the purpose of carrying out executive business of any kind. A familiar illustration of that is the census. In most other provinces in India, I believe in almost all, there exists, owing to their revenue system, a variety of officers called tahsildars, mamlatdars, and so forth, whose main business is the collection of the revenue, but who, as a matter of fact, are the working instruments of the district officer for general executive purposes. In Bengal it is hardly too much to say that there is absolutely no executive agency subordinate to the Magistrate except the police, and the result is that, when census operations are being organised and carried out, the Magistrate is virtually compelled to employ the police on a variety of functions which are entirely alien to their proper duties. I have myself employed Sub-Inspectors and Head-Constables of Police on testing the boundaries of survey villages, and ascertaining what hamlets were included in the area demarcated by the survey. This was work which had nothing to do with police business, and for which the police were in no way qualified. But there was no one else to do it, and it had to be done. The same may be said of many other executive matters, which will occur to any one with district experience. Things have to be done, and if they are to be done efficiently, the police are the only agency that can be employed.

"I imagine that no one is likely to suspect me of any half-heartedness as regards the extension of the panchayat. As I said last week, I believe it to be well suited to the needs of villages, and I desire to see it extended. But it is perfectly clear that if the extension of the panchayat is to be left to the Magistrate's invididual exertions, it must necessarily progress very slowly. The magisterial staff of a district is so overburdened with judicial duties that the officers composing it cannot be employed regularly or on a large scale in visiting villages for the purpose of introducing the panchayat system. If the District Magistrate is limited to this agency, we need not expect to hear of many elective panchayats. If, on the other hand, it is open to the Magistrate to use his discretion in employing the District Superintendent of Police to extend the system and to select the panchayat, we may rely on the introduction being more rapid and more effective. We must of course take it for granted that District Superintendents who are entrusted with the extension of the elective system will be ready to sink their personal opinions, and that officers who have strong prejudices against selection by the villagers will not be picked out to have the requisite powers delegated to them. Subject to this condition, the amendment now proposed will have the effect of enlisting the great influence of the Police Department on the side of the panchayat system generally, and will be a source of strength in every way. Moreover, owing to the fact that the police is the only agency that the Magistrate has at his disposal, the question comes to be a kind of Hobson's choice. Either the police must do the business and be responsible for it in a fair and open way, or if it is not done expressly and statedly by the police, it will be done on the report of the police.

They will determine the issue, but will not be responsible for the result. Obviously the Magistrate cannot be personally acquainted with the circumstances of every village in his district, and the only persons on whose information he can possibly act in matters of this sort are the regular police. I may mention here that the Police Committee were well aware of this fact. It was their wish to strengthen the Magistrate's hands by providing him with officers of a somewhat different type, who would form a channel of communication between him and the regular police in this matter. They proposed circle officers for the express purpose of supervising the village police. That proposal has been found impracticable on financial and other grounds, and I only refer to it here in order to show the point of view from which the Police Committee regarded the matter, a point of view which explains the necessity of the present amendment. These are the reasons which satisfy me that it is necessary to empower the Magistrate to delegate his power to the District Superintendent, if any material progress is to be made in introducing the Act."

THE HON'BLE THE PRESIDENT said:—"I have only a few words to say on this amendment, but I wish to express how entirely I concur with the view taken by the Hon'ble Mr. Lambert in his treatment of this question. The remarks put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Allen and the Hon'ble Mr. Risley just now, although they take the same side as I do, are prompted by a different conception of the case from mine. The Hon'ble Mr. Allen's remarks rested chiefly on the necessity of putting the chaukidar under the Police Department, and the Hon'ble Mr. Risley also has spoken as if the intention is to give the police as a body power over the panchayats, taking them as a whole. The view I take of the question is simply a plain executive view. Here you have the Magistrate of the district with very heavy duties to perform, and though, as the Hon'ble Mr. Allen has said, in the original Act, VI of 1870, the Magistrate of the district as such is only mentioned in two sections, yet in our amending Act there are three other important sections which restrict power to him alone, and do not give it to the Magistrate in the abstract; therefore the Magistrate of the district has to perform certain very important duties in respect of this Bill.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe's amendment gives the Magistrate of the district power to delegate his functions under the Act to any Magistrate of a sub-division, or to any Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him. In most cases the Sadar sub-division is the most important part of the district, and in some districts there are no sub-divisions at all. What assistance will he have for carrying out the procedure under this Act, in particular that part of the procedure to which some of us attach great importance—the new method of creating panchayats by selection or acclamation? He has generally under him about two Deputy Magistrates of the first class. One of them has probably the charge of treasury work and cannot go out of the station. He would only have the other Deputy Magistrate whom he could send about to carry out this duty of presiding over the deliberations of the villagers in selecting their panchayats. But there is also at his right hand a most influential and experienced officer in the District Superintendent of Police, and one whose occupations specially connect him with this subject and do not distract his attention from it. So what we propose by this amendment is to recognise him as a valuable assistant to the district Magistrate in carrying out the provisions of this Act. I rather deprecate speaking of the police as a department in this question, or assuming that we are placing the chaukidar under the police as a whole. The amendment places him under the District Superintendent, not under the police; and we have further the restriction which you have very wisely put, that the Magistrate cannot delegate his powers without the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division, and that he must do so in writing.

"I therefore trust that the question will so approve itself to you that you will agree that there is no danger, such as might be anticipated, of any evil influence of the police being exercised over the chaukidar; while I think it will serve to give the Magistrate another valuable assistant in carrying out the working of the Act."

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton's amendment was then put to the vote and carried on the following division:—

Ayes 7.	Noes 4.
The Hon'ble Mr. Playfair.	The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder.
„ „ Maharajah Sir Harendra Kishore Sing Bahadur.	„ „ Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar.

„ „ Mr. Lambert.
„ „ Mr. Risley.
„ „ Mr. Cotton.

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder moved that for section 4 the following be substituted:—

'The panchayat shall, subject to the control of the District Magistrate, determine the number of chaukidars to be employed in a village:

Provided that there shall be at least two chaukidars appointed in every village in which there are 150 houses, and one additional chaukidar for every complete 100 houses beyond such number:

Provided further that, without the sanction of the Commissioner, there shall not be more than one chaukidar for every 60 houses.'

He said:—"As the principle involved in all the three amendments which stand in my name is the same, I wish first to make some remarks which will apply to all of them, and then to deal with each of them afterwards. The object of sections 4, 5 and 8 of the present Bill is to withdraw from the panchayats certain powers which they have hitherto exercised, and to place them in the hands of the Magistrate. These powers are, first, the determination of the number of chaukidars in the village; secondly, the fixing of the salaries of the chaukidar within certain limits prescribed by the Act; and thirdly, the appointment of chaukidars. It was said by the hon'ble member in charge of the Bill that this was a step in the direction of bringing the village police into closer relations with the Government, and to strengthen the control of the executive over the village police. I should have thought the best way to effect that object would be to departmentalise the whole village police, to bring it under one system, and thus strike a blow at the root of the municipalised village police. But there is a difficulty—a serious difficulty—in the way; for, as was pointed out by the learned Advocate-General at the last meeting, that in that case the Government would have to take upon itself the payment of the whole cost of maintaining the village police, as it does for its regular police, and to abolish the chaukidari tax altogether. The village police in this country from time immemorial has been a purely municipal institution, because it has been maintained at the cost of the villagers, and its control has been in the hands of the village communities. By this Bill it is proposed to destroy the municipal character of the village police so far as its control is concerned, but in so far as the cost of its maintenance is concerned, its municipal character is to be preserved. I venture to think that it will neither be fair nor equitable for the Government to tell the people of the country living in villages, 'we have hitherto allowed you to enjoy certain rights and powers of control over the village police for which you have had to pay; we will now take away those rights and powers from you, but you must continue to pay all the same.'

"It is said that the village watch in England has been abolished, and the power of control of the villagers has been taken way. It is perfectly true that the village watch, which was established in England in 1833 upon a purely representative and municipal basis, has been abolished, but in its place the people of England have now got the county and the borough police, which are no less representative and municipal institutions than the village police which has been abolished; for they are maintained from local funds, and their control is in the hands of a joint committee consisting of the Justices of the Quarter Sessions and the County Councillors under the Local Government Act of 1888, and this notwithstanding the opinion of John Stuart Mill. If these powers are taken away from the panchayats, you reduce them merely to an assessing and tax-collecting body. They will have no power whatever over the village police.

"In order to come to a just conclusion whether these powers should be taken away from the panchayat or not, it is necessary to look back to the history of the legislation on the subject. Before 1817 the villagers in this country were allowed to maintain their own police, and to have full control over them without any interference on the part of the Government. In fact their position was just the same as that of every man now who is allowed to have his own durwan in his own house. In 1817, for the first time by Bengal Regulation XX of 1817, the Government recognised these village watchmen. By that Regulation the appointment and control over them was allowed to remain with the villagers. It only required that these village chaukidars should register themselves at the nearest thánas, and it imposed certain duties on them to act as an informing agency to the regular police in respect of certain crimes committed within their respective villages. But that fact alone did not make them regular policemen in any sense of the term, as was said by the learned Advocate-General at the last meeting. They continued to be servants of the villagers. This state of things continued for over forty years, and in 1859 this matter was enquired into by Mr. (afterwards Sir Henry) Ricketts, who introduced a Bill into Council proposing that the appointment and dismissal of the village watchman should be in the hands and under the control of the Magistrate. That Bill was dropped, and nothing further was done till the year 1863, when Mr. (afterwards Sir Charles) Hobhouse was asked by the Government to make a report on the subject of the reorganisation of the village police in Bengal. His report suggested that the fund for the payment of the village police should be supplied by the landed proprietors or heads of village communities, but the management and employment of the force, its appointment, organization, dismissal and payment were to be entirely independent of the zamindars or village communities, but should be vested in the District Superintendent of Police subject to the general control of the Magistrate. Those recommendations were opposed by the native community of this province, with the result that nothing was done on that report. Then in the year 1866 Mr. D. J. McNeile was appointed special officer to investigate the subject de novo. He proposed the entire abolition of the village watch, and the appointment in its place of a body of policemen to be selected and appointed by the executive authorities, the entire force being in direct subordination to the regular police. This was strenuously opposed by the native community, and the grounds upon which they opposed it were these:—First, that the change proposed was a revolution and not a reform; second that the absence of such a link as the village police between the regular police and the people would always work unsatisfactorily; and thirdly, that it was contrary to the wishes of the native community and subversive of the principle upon which the village watch had been always recognised as a village institution. The result of that opposition was the introduction of the Bill of 1870, when all these reports and recommendations were fully considered and deliberated upon, and Act VI of 1870 was passed.

"Now let us see what that Act did with regard to these powers of the panchayat. These three powers were dealt with by sections 11, 12, and 35 of the Act. Section 11 provides as follows:—

'The panchayat shall determine the number of chaukidars to be employed in a village: provided that there shall be at least two chaukidars appointed in every village in which there are 150 houses, and one additional chaukidar for every complete number of 100 houses beyond such number of 150.'

"So that they allowed this particular power to remain in the hands of the panchayat, imposing one single condition only, and that condition, as I have shown, is contained in a proviso to that section. Then section 12 provides that 'the panchayat shall from time to time determine the monthly salaries of the chaukidars to be appointed: provided that such salaries shall not be less than three nor more than six rupees per month.'

"In this section also they allowed the panchayat to retain their power; they only put certain limitations to the salary of the chaukidar. And by section 35 they enacted that 'the panchayat shall appoint the persons to be chaukidars under this Act, and may from time to time, with the sanction of the Magistrate, dismiss any such chaukidars.'

"So that with the power of appointment and dismissal of the chaukidar, which they had before, there was no interference at all. This Act was allowed to be worked for nearly 13 years, when in 1883 another Committee was appointed to enquire into the working of this Act. That Committee is better known by the name of Mr. Monro's Committee. It made its report in 1883, recommending, first, that the chaukidar should be nominated by the panchayat, their fitness was to be reported upon by the police, and the nomination was to be confirmed by the Magistrate. Secondly, they recommended that it would be preferable to leave it to the panchayat to determine the number of the chaukidars to be employed subject to the control of the Magistrate; and lastly, that the question of pay should be left to the Government to determine from time to time according to local circumstances. Mr. Westmacott, one of the members of that Committee, dissented from that report, and would leave the powers and duties of the panchayats untouched. The report of Mr. Monro's Committee was circulated to all the officers of the Government, when Mr. D. R. Lyall in 1884, not only sent in a report, but drafted a Bill founded upon the recommendations of the last-mentioned Committee, providing, among other things, that the chaukidars should be appointed by the panchayat as before, but subject to the approval of the Magistrate. Second, that the District Superintendent should give the man so appointed a certificate of appointment which would specify the rate of pay he was to draw, and be registered at the thána.

"After this the whole matter came before this Council in 1886, when all the previous reports and recommendations made by the officers of Government and by Committees after the passing of the Act of 1870 were fully discussed, sifted and deliberated upon, with the result that Act I of 1886 was passed, and by that Act all those powers of which I am speaking were left untouched. Then, about three or four years after the passing of Act I of 1886, in September 1890, the Committee for the reform of the police of the Lower Provinces of Bengal was appointed by the Government, and this Committee went into an elaborate enquiry into the village chaukidari system. I shall here observe that the enquiries of this Committee were not directed to what took place since Act I of 1886 came into operation, but they embraced all those grounds upon which the former reports and recommendations were founded, which were exhaustively considered and deliberated upon by this Council in 1886, and the Police Committee re-opened all the questions which were finally determined and set at rest by this Council in 1886.

"Let us see even under these circumstances what this report says with reference to those powers of the panchayat. I find on page 22 of the report the following:—

'In the Presidency Division the number of chaukidars is practically fixed by the Magistrates of districts. A tendency has occasionally been observed on the part of panchayats to appoint a smaller number of chaukidars than the law requires, but this has been checked by the Magistrate on the matter being reported to him by the police. In some cases also when, owing to the size of a village having increased, a larger number of chaukidars is required, the police have reported the fact to the Magistrate, who has issued orders to the panchayats.

'In the Burdwan Division also the District Magistrates fix the number of chaukidars on the legal scale, and no reduction is allowed without reference to them. The same practice is in force in the Rajshahi Division. The Magistrate of Rangpur remarks:—'Panchayats are not allowed to have their own way in these matters; for if they were, the chaukidari force would be reduced to a mere shadow. Practically it is the Magistrate who, after police enquiry, decides whether any reductions are practicable, or whether any increase or re-distribution of chaukidars' beats should be made. But in all cases attention is paid to the representations of panchayats, which are freely made.' In the Dacca Division the determination of the number of chaukidars appears to be left to the panchayats, but the Magistrates have frequently had to interfere to restrain panchayats from reducing the number of chaukidars below the legal scale. In the Chittagong Division the allotment of chaukidars is everywhere regulated according to the legal scale on representations from the panchayats, which are dealt with by the Magistrate.'

"We find then that in most places the panchayats were not allowed by the Magistrates to exercise the powers which the law gave them, on the ground that in some places there was found a tendency to reduce the number of chaukidars, and that therefore, without any warrant of law, the Magistrates themselves encroached on the rights of the panchayats and took it upon themselves to determine the number of chaukidars to be employed in the villages. And this is the recommendation of the Police Committee following immediately after the above extract:—

'It will thus be seen that, though the law contemplates that the determination of the number of chaukidars shall be left to the panchayat, it has everywhere been found necessary in the interest of the public for the Magistrate to interfere to secure the proper performance of this duty by the panchayats. Such interference, though not strictly warranted by the law, may be brought within the scope of section 62, and is justified by the necessities of the case. In any new law that may be passed, it should, we think, be expressly legalized. In other words, the panchayat should exercise the power conferred on it by section 11 of Act VI of fixing the number of chaukidars, subject to the confirmation of the Magistrate.'

Now what is the proposal—

[The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton having referred the speaker to paragraph 40 of the report, the following extract from it was read:—'Under all the circumstances of the case, it seems to us that it would be better not to fix any limit by law, but to leave the number of chaukidars to be employed and the area in charge of each to the discretion of the local officers.']

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder, continuing, said:—"I quite see that it does not touch this point at all. I say, with regard to the determining of the number of chaukidars, the recommendation of the Committee is that that power should be left untouched in the hands of the panchayat, but subject to the controlling power of the Magistrate. Now what did the present Bill propose? It proposed that the District Magistrate should determine the number of chaukidars to be employed in a village. The section stopped there. The Select Committee at their first meeting passed the section in that state, but afterwards an admirable note of Mr. Nolan was put before them, in which it was shown how dangerous it would be not to put any control on the Magistrate in fixing the number of chaukidars, and that in that case the Magistrate would be in a position to increase the chaukidari tax to any extent he liked. The Select Committee felt the weight of that opinion, and they fixed a maximum limit to the power of the Magistrate to appoint chaukidars, that is to say, they fixed the limit at one chaukidar to 60 houses. That is the maximum limit.

"Now, taking all these circumstances into consideration, especially the circumstance that these very matters were considered at full length and discussed and deliberated upon by this Council in 1886, and that nothing can be pointed out, either from the Report of the Police Committee or any of the reports circulated in connection with this Bill, alluding to any special circumstances which have taken place since 1886 to justify the transfer of this power from the panchayat to the District Magistrate, I submit that no case whatever has been made out why this power should be taken from them. The only suggestion which appears anywhere is the statement in the Police Committee's report that in some places a tendency has been observed to reduce the number of chaukidars. I say that if this tendency really exists, and if any attempt to do so is hereafter made by panchayats, by all means give the controlling power to the Magistrates. Let them in that case, and in that case only, interfere and put the panchayat right; but it would not do, because in some districts there is a tendency on the part of some panchayats to reduce the number of chaukidars in particular villages, to take away the power from the whole body of the panchayats all over the province.

"I trust, and sincerely trust, that this Council will not do what previous Governments, respecting the feelings of the native community and in accordance with their wishes, refused to do, and that this Council will make the post of panchayat a respectable and responsible one, by giving additional powers to them, and not by taking away powers from them. It is better that there should be no panchayat at all, than that there should be emasculated panchayats all over the province."

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said:—"The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder has found it necessary, in placing his amendment before you, to travel over the whole principle of the Bill, and I shall be obliged to follow the same course in my reply; but I will not detain the Council longer than I can help. This amendment has in its germ the most important principle—the fundamental principle—of local self-government. According to my hon'ble friend, we should extend the principle of local self-government to panchayats of villages, and entrust them with the control of the police. That is a doctrine which I entirely traverse, and I shall state briefly my reasons for doing so. I have been charged, lavishly charged, in the public press with being the enemy of local self-government, because of the attitude I have taken up with regarp to this Bill. Now I think that if any man in Calcutta, or I may even say in Bengal, may claim to have identified himself with the furtherance of the cause of local self-government in this province, not only in his writings, but in his public actions, it is myself; and therefore I may claim to be an authority as to the principles under which local self-government should be extended. The first and most radical principle involved is to extend this precious boon of local self-government gradually and cautiously, not broadcast and indiscriminately; but when you do extend it, do it ungrudgingly and with confidence. When the municipal and local self-government Acts were introduced into this province, I pointed out at the time, in my capacity as the Commissioner of a Division, that a serious mistake was being made by the Government in extending the provisions of those Acts promiscuously and indiscriminately throughout the province. I said that if the provisions of these Acts are to succeed, if they are to reflect credit on the framers of the Acts and on the people of the province generally, great care and caution should be exercised in limiting their application in the first instance. I said, introduce these Acts gradually and cautiously, but impose as few restrictions as you can. If you find they succeed with the exercise of such caution, then apply them more generally; but be careful in the first instance. I was not alone in the advice I gave to the Government at that time, but our advice was not followed; and, as you are aware, it has now devolved on my hon'ble friend opposite (Mr. Risley) to introduce a Bill which has been denounced as a retrograde measure in several respects, because more care and caution were not taken in introducing the law relating to municipal administration in the first instance. If these remarks apply to Municipalities and to the working of local boards, how infinitely more applicable are they when we come to discuss the extension of local self-government to rural tracts and villages. Now, I am far from asserting that local self-government may not be extended to villages in this province. I believe that some steps might judiciously have been taken in this direction. I believe that the Unions contemplated under the local self-government Act might have been established and organised with a view to the exercise of particular functions; but those functions are functions of a purely local character. If you extend the principle of local self-government to a village or group of villages, it must be limited in its application to questions in which alone that village or group of villages is interested: that is to say, such objects as sanitation, keeping tanks clean, the provision of good drinking water, it may be the drainage of a portion of the village, the clearing of jungle, and the like. It occurs to me that the improvement of water-supply is one of the first things which may properly and rightly be entrusted to village Unions. Again, there is the question of village communications. What can more aptly be made over to local bodies in the mufassal than the control over their village roads? What more naturally than the control over schools, primary schools, the village patshalas? But if there is one department more than another which you cannot safely entrust to rural administration, it is the police. In no respect is the administration of the police a function which the Government can decentralize or make over to local bodies, and I will tell you why. It is not a matter of indifference to the whole of the community whether any particular village becomes a nest of robbers or a focus of disturbance. The community generally is not much affected if the water in a particular village is foul, if the village schools are not properly attended to, if the roads are out of repair. But the whole community is interested if the police administration of the village becomes a scandal, if dacoits can settle there without prevention, if a gang of thieves or criminal tribes are allowed to locate themselves there. For the same reason as the administration of jails is kept in the hands of the superior authorities, for the same reason as the administration of justice is retained in the hands of the higher authorities, so the administration of the police in every civilised country in the world is reserved to the executive power.

"My hon'ble friend referred to the practice now prevailing in England. Correctly he pointed out that the old village watch in England, a body of men organised on somewhat the same principle as our village chaukidars, has been abolished, and their place has now been taken by the County Police which is controlled by the County Council, the executive authority represented by the District Magistrate in this country. [Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder.—'But they are elected'] England has reached its present position after centuries of toil, disturbance, and strife. Our system has not sprung up like Minerva from the head of Jove. It has been obtained after the toil of centuries. Those who think that a similar organisation can be created by this Council, or by any other Legislative Council in India, are greatly mistaken. Generations must pass away before the system which prevails in India can be modelled on that in England, before institutions organised on that model are able to work up to the English standard. The County Council is the executive body in England, which corresponds to the District Magistrate here. The positions are not wholly analogous, because the circumstances of the country are so widely different. But we do not in England entrust the police of the village to the villagers; they are entrusted to the control of the principal executive body of the county. And Bengal, I say, is the only province in India where an attempt has been made to develop this vicious tendency of local self-government, that is to say, to entrust the control of the village police to a village body. As you have been told in an earlier speech made to-day, the old Regulations placed the village chaukidar under the orders of the police daroga.

"My hon'ble friend gave a history of the village police in the earlier times in this country, a history which, I may be permitted to say, bristles with inaccuracies. I do not think it worth while to detain the Council by stating at length what the history of the village chaukidar is, but I may be permitted to say that in early times, towards the close of the last century, at the time when the Permanent Settlement was passed, we find the whole village watch placed in the hands of the zamindars. It was one of the agencies by which the zamindar exercised his authority; he was the supreme executive authority, not only in matters of revenue, but of police, and he employed his servants indiscriminately for the maintenance of order and for the collection of the public dues. Under the Permanent Settlement the zamindar was relieved of his police responsibility, and the position of the village watchman remained in a very indeterminate and undefined condition, and that indeterminate and undefined condition survives in all parts of Bengal in which chakaran rights, as they are called, still remain. The position of the village chaukidar was very uncertain: he was partly under the orders and control of the zamindar, and partly under the Police daroga. The issue has been frequently disputed, and it has gone up to the highest tribunal, and the state of things is still practically as unsatisfactory as it has been during the whole time. These remarks are applicable to that portion of Bengal in which chaukidars are maintained by service tenures, but over the whole of Eastern Bengal the village chaukidar is, as we now find him, a creature entirely of our own creation. Early in this century he had no existence. Indeed, reports from the Magistrates of Chittagong, Rajshahi, &c, show that they did not find chaukidars existing in any village; there was disorder prevailing, and they created an organisation of village chaukidars to assist the regular police. And indeed Regulation XX of 1817 was passed primarily to vindicate the action which the District Magistrates of their own authority, but with the approval of the Government, had taken. There were no police panchayats then. Panchayats have indeed always existed in this country, and I have a right to complain if it was ever supposed that I said that the institution of the panchayat was the creation of the British Government. For social and caste purposes the panchayat is an institution which has existed from time immemorial, but for purposes of executive and administrative details the panchayat is the creation of the British Government. As far as I am aware, the first mention of the panchayat in legislation will be found in the well-known Act XX of 1856, which organised the chaukidars, as they are called in that Act, in towns and bazars, places other than agricultural villages, and the functions of the panchayat under that Act are simply and solely to assess and collect the tax. Under that Act the Magistrate determines the number and the wages of the chaukidars; he constitutes and appoints the pan-chayat. There was no elective principle in those days. The chaukidar was appointed by the Magistrate, and the duties of the panchayat were simply the assessment of the tax, the collection of it, and the payment of the chaukidars. That Act is still in force over a very considerable portion of India, although in Bengal it has no longer any validity.

"The next mention we have of the panchayat is in the Bengal Act VI of 1870, and there for the first time the panchayats are created by the British Government for executive purposes in the mufassal. That Act has now been in force more than twenty years, and it has been introduced in the course of that time into about one-half of Bengal. Is it a fact that in those districts in Bengal in which that Act has been introduced, and in which panchayats have worked, the chaukidari system has been more successful than it has been elsewhere? I am not aware that the experience of any member of this Council will be able to answer that question in the affirmative. On the contrary, as far as the control of the chaukidar is concerned, as far as all police work is concerned, panchayats practically have no existence. They have done no good whatever; they have been of no use. But they have done one thing. There is no doubt that they have assessed and collected the chaukidari rate, and have paid the chaukidars within the villages where they exist. There is no doubt that the chaukidars, where there is a panchayat, are better paid than in other parts of Bengal, where panchayats have not yet been legalised. That is true. As regards any other respect, police work proper, executive control, the panchayat has been useless, and that is the opinion of everyone, with the one exception of Mr. Westmacott, who has enquired into the matter. In the very section of the Police Committee's Report from which my hon'ble friend quoted just now, I find it stated: 'It will thus be seen that, though the law contemplates that the determination of the number of chaukidars shall be left to the panchayat, it has everywhere been found necessary, in the interest of the public, for the Magistrate to interfere to secure the proper performance of this duty by the panchayat.' If it is the deliberate verdict of the Police Committee that the panchayats have nowhere done their duty except when compelled to do it by the interference of the Magistrate, how can any member of this Council say that the institution of the panchayat for such purposes, namely, fixing the number and the salary of the chaukidar, has been a success? It is because it has been such a flagrant failure that the Committee was appointed by the Government, on whose recommendations radical modifications in the law, which the Local Government has more than once attempted to carry, but I regret to say have abandoned owing to a storm of prejudice and ignorance, are now proposed as being thoroughly necessary.

"I stated that Bengal is the only province in India where any attempt has been made to municipalise the village police. I will tell you briefly the practice which prevails in other provinces. In Bombay, under the Village Police Act VIII of 1867, the administration of the village police throughout the district is placed, subject to the control and direction of the Commissioner of Police, under the Magistrate of the district, who is authorised to delegate his powers to any Magistrate who is subordinate to him. That is the practice in Bombay. The village patel, who works directly under the District Magistrate, is the executive authority both for revenue and criminal purposes. He exercises both functions. There is no panchayat or anything approaching to a panchayat. In the North-West Provinces proper, to which the Act XVI of 1873 applies (that does not include Oudh), the chaukidar is nominated by the zamindar, but is appointed by the Magistrate. There is no panchayat. The Local Government makes rules for regulating the number of chaukidars. In Madras the Police Act XXIV of 1855 applies alike to the general and the village police. There is no separate organisation of the village watch. The general Police Act is as applicable to the regular policemen as to village policemen; both the regular and village police are equally and alike placed under the authority of the District Superintendent of Police under the District Magistrate. There are panchayats in the Madras Presidency, but not for the exercise of police functions. Panchayats have been created by law to exercise certain judicial functions in villages. The law empowers the panchayats to dispose of petty civil suits. That is the only panchayat which the law recognises in Madras. In Burma the Deputy Commissioner has power under Act II of 1880 to appoint and remove the rural police. There is no panchayat. In the Punjab there is no special Act; no Act relating to the rural police, but by law the Local Government is authorised to establish a system of village watch, and to make rules for its organisation. The Council will see, therefore, that in other provinces in India it has not been thought advisable to follow the unwise step taken by Bengal in the Act of 1870, to entrust village police functions in rural villages to the hands of the villagers.

"But I will admit that there is one weak point in the Bill I have had the honour to introduce. It is true, as my hon'ble friend has pointed out, that the principal functions of the panchayat, as they will be if this Bill is passed, will consist in the assessment and collection of the chaukidari rate. He says: Why maintain the panchayat at all if you are not going to entrust them with other functions than these; why impose on the people such invidious duties with no compensation? I do admit that that is unquestionably a weak point in the Bill, and the Government was placed in a difficulty when this point came under its consideration. But the rates from which the chaukidars are to be paid has to be collected from one source or another. If this Act were introduced into all villages in Bengal, the total of the chaukidari rate to be collected would amount to a sum of not less than 60 lakhs of rupees. The Act has, however, been extended to only a portion of Bengal, and in that portion the rate amounts to about 30 or 40 lakhs. In any case, however, this is a large sum of money which must be realised by some means, and the Government has considered how it can best be realised. Shall we continue the practice existing of collecting the rate, or shall we devise any other means? We considered what is done in other provinces. Now, what is done in the North-West Provinces? There the chaukidars are paid out of a rate which is levied on the zamindars for the purpose of paying for local objects—for communications, for dispensaries and many other purposes—and the law expressly says the village police are to be paid from it. A sum equivalent to 10 per cent. on the land revenue paid by the zamindar is the rate levied for such purposes in temporarily-settled districts, and that constitutes the source from which the chaukidar is paid. In Burma a 10 per cent. rate is levied in the same way, and a portion of it is devoted to the payment of the village police.. In Madras the village police are paid on a similar principle. There a cess is levied of one anna on the rupee of the revenue paid, and that amount is applied to the remuneration of the village servants employed both in revenue and police duties. Well, that is the alternative which presented itself to this Government. We might impose the additional cess which exists in other provinces and is imposed on the land. Indeed, a similar proposal was actually made in 1851, and was introduced into the Council of the Government of India, but in consequence of the storm of opposition which was raised by the zamindars of the province, the Bill was withdrawn. Now the Government is of opinion that that method is open to grave objection, and we thought it very unlikely that the members of this Council would be willing to agree to the principle that the whole of the expenditure, needed for the payment of chaukidars should be borne by the landed interest. At present the chaukidari rate is borne by all classes of the community within the village and apportioned upon the residents with reference to their position and their comparative wealth; each man, except the very poor, pays a small quota; every house pays something. Well, we thought it better that the tax should be continued to be realised in that way, than that the people at large should be relieved from this payment, and that the whole burden should be borne by the landed interest.

"Then came the question, why should the local panchayat collect this cess? Why should there not be a special officer appointed for the purpose? Why should there not be a tahsildar who should collect the cess in the way the panchayat now does? Well, we considered that alternative, but rejected it on the ground that it would let loose an army of about fifty thousand tahsildars for the purpose of collecting the rate, who would prove a source of oppression which the Government shrank from contemplating; and I have no doubt that if we had made such a proposal we should have been opposed by every member of this Council. All taxation is an evil, and we have before us a choice of evils, and it appeared to us that the present method under which the tax is collected is the best, namely, by members of the village who know the condition of the villagers, who would be less likely than any one else to oppress them, and whose interest it would be to secure the good treatment of the chaukidars. This would be more acceptable than any other form of taxation, or any other mode of realising it. I saw it actually stated in the Amrita Bazar Patrika that the chaukidari tax is more cruel in its operation than any tax in existence in the world. I can only say that this is an instance of remarkable exaggeration. All taxation is, I won't say cruel, but an evil in itself, but I believe there is no tax which operates less harshly upon the people than this chaukidari tax, assessed and realised as it is by the panchayats. I think it is quite possible that there are members of the Council now present who have resided many years in Bengal, and who, until the question of this Bill came before them for discussion, had never even heard of the existence of such a tax, a tax which works as smoothly and evenly as possible. Of all direct taxes levied in India, it is, in my judgment, the easiest and least open to objection, and that is why the Government, in considering this question, thought it wise and proper to leave the assessment and collection of this tax in the hands of the panchayat.

"But we do leave the panchayat some powers besides the power of assessment and collection. The power of nomination of the chaukidar is left in the hands of the panchayat, and for a very good reason, that we wish to maintain the local knowledge of the chaukidar in the village in which he is appointed. If the power of nomination is given to an outsider, there is the risk that some one not residing in the village may be appointed. This, therefore, is a very material power left in the hands of the panchayat. There is also a further section of the Bill which provides that a chaukidar shall obey the orders of the panchayat in regard to keeping watch within his village, and other matters connected with his duties as chaukidar. We do not emasculate the panchayat altogether; we leave him considerable powers, to be exercised in the village, which are not likely to be injurious to the administration. But such powers as fixing the number of the chaukidars, fixing their salary, and the power of substantive appointment, are matters which the Government are of opinion should be left to the executive authorities.

"One point more only before I sit down, and that is with regard to the number of the chaukidars. I quite agree with my hon'ble friend that it is very important that the number should not be too large, and it is in order to impose a check, as it is feared that some Magistrates might be disposed to appoint too large a number, that it has been provided that, without the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division, there shall not be more than one chaukidar for every 60 houses. But, as a matter of fact, the number of chaukidars in Bengal has, I believe, not materially increased owing to the interference of the Magistrate. The number is, I think, very excessive; but I do not think the tendency of the Magistrates has been to increase it. I will state the result of my enquiries as to the numbers at different times. I find it stated by Mr. Sherishtadar Grant that at the time of the Permanent Settlement there were 150,000 village chaukidars; Sir F. Halliday in 1838, after a full enquiry, gave the number at 170,000; in 1866, Mr. McNeile, after special enquiries, found the number to be 190,000; the Police Committee fixed it at 168,000, and now in the report of the Inspector-General of Police for the past year the number is put down at 171,000. These figures do not show that the Magistrates have unduly exercised their powers by making the chaukidars so numerous as to be a burden upon the people. I believe that Magistrates generally have no such wish or desire, although it is possible that in some instances they have improperly increased the number. It is to check such a tendency that we fixed a limit. My own belief is that in many districts of Bengal there are twice the number of chaukidars that are desirable for good administration, and that in every district nearly the number can be reduced."

The Hon'ble Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar said:—I am afraid we are making a mountain of a mole-hill in this matter of the powers of the panchayat. The functions which the amendments standing in the name of the Hon'ble Gonesh Chunder Chunder propose should be discharged by the panchayat, are not only of the simplest character, but are precisely those which, as I gather from what fell from the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton, the panchayats from their local knowledge are most competent to discharge. The panchayats have hitherto, under the Act we are going to amend, been enjoying the power of appointing and dismissing chaukidars, determining their number and fixing their salaries; but the majority of the Select Committee have thought fit to take away those powers, and the only reason for doing so which I could gather from the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton, was that those powers had been abused and would be abused. Well I cannot deny that such powers have sometimes been abused, nor can I guarantee that they will not be abused in the future. But I would ask what powers, what rights, what privileges have not been abused by men of larger calibre than simple illiterate villagers? Is the simple fact of abuse of power any excuse for its abolition when its use is likely to be attended with beneficial results? The endeavour of the Legislature, in my humble opinion, should be to provide against the recurrence of such abuses, and in the present case ample provision has been made in this direction. You have circumscribed these powers in every possible way; you have fixed the minimum number of chaukidars and their minimum pay, and at every step the panchayat will be under the control of the Magistrate. If this will not minimise the chances of abuse, I do not know what can.

"Under these circumstances I do not see that any serious harm can result from the panchayat being vested with the powers which they now enjoy. Without these powers they will be reduced to a mere nonentity and an absolute farce. Deprived of the dignity which these powers confer, the office of panchayat will cease to be attractive; and you will find that all respectable villagers will avoid, as they are now doing, to be elected to the panchayat. And then, Sir, it would be better far that the panchayat should be saved from all trouble, and that the panchayat system should be abolished altogether. With these words I heartily support the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe said:—"With the last speaker I will venture to recall the Council to the matter of the amendment before us. The Hon'ble member in charge of the Bill has travelled over a series of matters with which, at the present moment, the Council is in no sort of way concerned. There is no question before it of imposing any tax on the land or substituting any other mode of collection than that adopted in the Act which is being amended, except by the instrumentality of the panchayat. There is no question before the Council as to whether it is or is not desirable that a tahsildar should be appointed in the place of the panchayat. There is no question whether or no such powers as the zamindars and landholders throughout the country possess still should be further docked; whether the chaukidari tax should be taken as being the most cruel of all impositions, nor whether it is or is not collected with greater ease than any other tax necessary to be imposed on the country for its due administration. Neither is there any question now before the Council, as I understand it, with respect to the principle of local self-government.

"The Hon'ble member has given the Council, if he will pardon me for saying so, a rechauffé of his speech on the former occasion when he was combatting the position that the panchayat should be allowed to select whom they would appoint to be the panchayat of the village or group of villages. The simple question before the Council is whether the panchayat are to have, subject to the control of the District Magistrate, power to determine the number of the chaukidars to be appointed, and in that respect I am bound to say that my view accords with that of the Hon'ble mover of the amendment and that of the other Hon'ble member (Mr. Risley), who has put his name to a dissent from the recommendations of the Select Committee. What do we want to do? I take it that the real object which the Council has in view is to get as good men on the panchayat as is possible, and to have as much economy as is possible in the supervision of their actions, and as little friction as possible in respect of their actions.

"Now how is that end to be attained? If you have men appointed, whether by the Magistrate himself or by the villagers through such selection as may be had, to be members of the panchayat, does any one reasonably think that he will find good men to act if these men are to have no other functions than that of assessing and collecting the tax? Are they to have no voice whatever in determining the number of persons whose pay they are to raise, and for the purpose of obtaining that pay they are to assess their co-villagers? With the Commissioner of Bhagalpur I agree that the attempt to improve the panchayat and gradually form them into a useful body should not be abandoned, and with him I concur and think that no improvements are to be expected if they are to be deprived of all authority. They must have some authority; otherwise you will not get fit persons to perform onerous and, in some sense, invidious and certainly gratuitous duties. To expect otherwise will be to expect a revolution in human nature itself.

"It is clear they ought to have some voice in the matter, and the minute of the Commissioner of Rajshahi, already referred to, puts this positions as it seems to me, strongly when he says under date the 30th June, 1892 :—'You are aware that all District Magistrates would, if permitted, increase the number of the regular police and the pay of the head-constables, but their laudable desire to do this has not hitherto been gratified because its indulgence would impose a burden on the Provincial exchequer. Government cannot allow District Magistrates to be the best judges as to the expense to be incurred on the police, and must find some difficulty in distinguishing between this case and that of the chaukidars; for it will scarcely be maintained that the incidence of the cost on a special tax not on the general funds at the disposal of the Lieutenant-Governor makes any essential difference. The tax-payers need protection quite as much as the Local Government.'

"The Hon'ble member in charge of the Bill has combatted the amendment by stating a number of things relating to Madras, Bombay, the North-Western Provinces and the Panjab. With curious inconsistency he told us there was no distinction between the village police and the ordinary police in Madras, and yet they were at the same time dealt with by the same authority. I suppose he meant that the police were simply subject to their own authorities. But he has pointed out further that the examples which he cited were really nothing to the point, because he admits, to use his own language, that no other province has taken the step which has been taken in Bengal in recognising, if not establishing, the panchayat in their relations to the village police. Therefore we must naturally expect that what prevails in these places will not be in accordance with the system which prevails in Bengal. So far as I can follow the Hon'ble mover of the amendment, he showed, and it is admitted by the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton that he did show, that although the attempts which are now being made in this Bill have been made on former occasions, they have not been accepted by the Executive Government yielding (as the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said) to the storm of prejudice and ignorance. Whose prejudice and ignorance? Of the villagers, or of the officers entrusted with the administration of justice throughout the country? As regards the latter, owing it is said to their multifarious duties, it is admitted that they have not been able to carry into operation the provisions of Act I of 1886, and so far therefore it may be said that they are very much dependent for their information upon the police and their subordinates, and that might excuse a certain amount of ignorance on their part. But I don't think it was their ignorance to which the Hon'ble member referred. And as regards the people of the country, I have before me reports from various bodies, and so far as regards the larger Associations of persons who ought not to be ignorant of the condition of the country in which they live, they are one and all in favour of the amendment of the Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder. The Murshidabad Association is not prepared to recommend taking away from panchayats the power of determining the number of chaukidars in villages. Another Association from Barisál says the same thing in somewhat different words. They said :—'The determination of the number of chaukidars to be appointed in a village and their salaries should naturally rest with those who are to improve the assessment. The panchayat will have the advantage of their local knowledge in the exercise of these powers, while the Magistrates, having no local knowledge, will not be in a position to know the area of the village, whether the houses are scattered or close together, and the number of chaukidars necessary to keep watch and go their rounds regularly.'

"From Eastern Bengal comes the following expression of opinion—'The Committee consider that to make the panchayat system a success and attractive to good people more power should be entrusted in their hands than at present. To this end the power of appointing and dismissing chaukidars should be left in their hands.' From Rajshahi I find the same thing—'The panchayat is expected to know the local requirements, and under the existing law it has the power to determine the number of chaukidars in its village. We do not see why this power is sought to be transferred to the Magistrate, who can hardly be expected to know the peculiar requirements of any village in the district'; and similarly from other Associations, I think some five or six others, whose opinions I will not weary the Council with reading, because the quotations I have given will, I think, suffice. The same opinion is expressed by the British Indian Association, the Bhagalpur Landholders' Association, and some rate-payers in meeting from Santipur.

"After all, what is the amendment? It is in effect, that which, despite the hon'ble member in charge of the Bill, has been approved by the Committee whose report led to the drafting of this Bill. It is true that in page 19 (paragraph 40), the Committee say—'Under all the circumstances of the case it seems to us that it would be better not to fix any limit by law, but to leave the number of chaukidars to be employed and the area in charge of each to the discretion of the local officers.' That was with reference to the suggested hard-and-fast limit of 60 houses, which in some places might not be feasible. But when they come to record their final recommendations they say in the paragraph at page 22 commencing with 'it will thus be seen that, though the law contemplates that the determination of the number of chaukidars shall be left to the panchayat, it has everywhere been found necessary in the interest of the public for the Magistrate to interfere to secure the proper performance of this duty by the panchayats. Such interference, though not strictly warranted by the law, may be brought within the scope of section 62, and is justified by the necessities of the case. In any new law that may be passed it should, we think, be expressly legalised. In other words, the panchayat should exercise the power conferred on it by section 11 of Act VI of fixing the number of chaukidars subject to the 'confirmation of the Magistrate.' And now it is proposed to free the panchayat from the duty in this respect imposed on it because it was found that in some instances this duty was not faithfully carried out. To remove altogether that duty seems to me a very strange step to take Rather let us meet the evil by applying an appropriate remedy. The appropriate remedy, unless the panchayat be altogether removed, is in a matter of this kind to subject them to the control of the Magistrate. If you do that you will, I venture to think, attain the object we all have in view, namely, that we should get men who will discharge these onerous and often invidious duties with greater care by allowing them to have a voice in the determination of the number of the chaukidars required for the village. But we should guard against the possibility of any abuse of the power by subjecting them to the control of the Magistrate, and that I understand is the meaning of the amendment before the Council. It seems to me that an attempt should be made to put the panchayat system on a proper footing, so as to see whether it can be worked in such a manner as we expect from it under the provisions of Act VI of 1870. We ought to do everything in our power to secure the co-operation of the best men who can be found for the purpose. Local self-government is not the question we have to consider, but what measures ought to be taken so as to secure the best men for carrying out the provision of this Act subject to the control of the Magistrate."

The Hon'ble Maharajah Sir Harendra Kishore Singh Bahadur said:—"I am not in favour of this amendment because I think that the panchayat should nominate the persons to be chaukidars, but I would leave the numbers to be determined by the Magistrate, who should also appoint them."

The Hon'ble Mr. Allen said:—"The Advocate-General has proposed to bring the Council back to the actual question before it on the words of the amendment, but it appears to me that he himself has taken as wide and devious a flight into the clouds as any of the preceding speakers. The only question involved in the amendment is as to whether the number of chaukidars to be appointed should be determined by the panchayat subject to the limitations laid down in the provisos to the amendment, which practically tie them hands and feet, leaving them little or no discretion. They must appoint one chaukidar and for 60 houses; they must appoint two for 150 houses; they have a discretion then of appointing more than one for any number of houses between 60 and 150. It is not difficult to know how that discretion will be exercised. When the number of 150 is passed, they must appoint an additional chaukidar for every 100 houses. The actual discretion left to them is almost nothing; and the question whether this truly trifling "privilege," as it is called, is likely to have such a wondrous effect in procuring capable and eminent men to be members of the panchayat, that if withheld, capable men will keep back in disgust, may be doubted. There is only one consideration which should weigh with us. It is not what the panchayat would like, but what is for the good of the village. How is the village protection to be secured with the minimum of expenditure, the minimum of friction and the maximum of certainty. That is the only question which the Council has to consider, and all the eloquence which has been expended to-day upon the trivial matter raised in the amendment appears to me entirely out of place."

The Hon'ble Mr. Lambert said:—"The principle involved in this amendment appears so important that I should like to say a few words. Act VI of 1870 was framed in a spirit of trust in the village community, and panchayats were established in the hope that they would co-operate with the regular police, and would exert themselves to render the rural police more efficient. The experience gained since 1870 shows that the results expected have not been realized; that whatever good has resulted from the introduction of the Act of 1870 has been brought about solely by official vigour and interference; that the panchayats have been apathetic or have misused their influence. For twenty years panchayats have been on their trial, and the result has been failure. On these grounds I am averse to entrusting to them any powers whatever connected with the organization of the village police, either as regards fixing their numbers, or appointing them, or fixing their pay. Past experience shows that the chaukidar must be made independent of the influence of panchayats in the discharge of his public duties. It may be objected, why then retain the office of panchayat at all? I reply that panchayats can still perform most important duties,—duties which are absolutely necessary for the maintenance of the system of village police, if it is to be maintained at all. For the payment of chaukidars under this Act about thirty-five lakhs of rupees are required annually, and it is of the utmost importance that this money should be raised by some agency which is not distasteful or harassing to the village communities. Therefore, the panchayats will still remain the machinery for assessing the village, and for collecting and disbursing the chaukidar's pay. Further, they will exercise control over the chaukidar so far as he is the village servant. With these powers let them be content, and let the general control of chaukidars be vested in the authorities responsible for the efficiency of the administration. If this is done, there seems to be no reason why the present system of rural police should not be fairly efficient. But if efficiency is to be sacrificed in order that powers may still be bestowed on the panchayat for which, after twenty years' trial, they have shown themselves unfitted, are there not grounds for fearing that the incompetency of the panchayat may lead before long to the abrogation of the entire system of the village watch? When the Committee of 1890 was appointed, 'it was clear,' so runs the introduction to the report, 'that at least ninety per cent. of the most dangerous offences against property remained undetected.' It is not likely that this state of things will be allowed to continue. Therefore, if the people value their old institution, it is their plain interest to see that no considerations retard the reform of the village police. It has been said over and over again that the efficiency of the regular police depends largely on the efficiency and co-operation of the village police. Panchayats can no longer be thought of as a means to this end. The system has had a long trial, and however competent panchayats may be to settle their own domestic affairs, they have shown themselves unfitted to be entrusted with powers in public matters, which affect the well-being of the community at large. I trust that in coming to a decision on this matter the Council will never lose sight of the aim of this Bill, which is, not to pass any opinion on the panchayat system generally, as it is in this country, but to improve the system of rural police."

The Hon'ble Mr. Risley said:—"In speaking with reference to the principle involved in this amendment, the hon'ble member in charge of the Bill referred to the experience of other parts of India, and remarked that it pointed all in one direction, and suggested one conclusion. In order to complete the reference and at the same time to cast some doubt on the inference which the hon'ble member sought to draw from it, I may perhaps be permitted to quote what appears to be the most recent record of such experience, as may be seen from a report in to-day's Pioneer of the proceedings of the Supreme Legislative Council on the Bill introduced by Sir Charles Crosthwaite to provide for the administration of the police in Upper Burma."

[The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton rose to order. He believed it was not regular to read in this Council the proceedings of any other Legislative Council.]

The Hon'ble the President said:—"He did not find anything to that effect in the rules, and practically there could be no objection to referring to a report of proceedings which was public property."

The Hon'ble Mr. Risley said:—"The extract from Sir Charles Crosthwaite's speech which he wished to read was the following:—

'The police administration in Burma, as in other parts of the Indian Empire, and perhaps more than in other parts, offers problems of much difficulty. One of the most difficult is how to get the police force into touch with the people, and to obtain their good will and assistance, without which the task of detecting and repressing crime is very hard. One cause of our difficulties has been that we have neglected the old indigenous institutions of the country, and have endeavoured to work entirely through a police department which has no connection with the people. All over Burma there was, in former times, a police machinery by which villages and portions of towns had their headmen, under whom were minor officials, each entrusted with the supervision of a number of houses, usually ten. Even where this machinery has, from ignorance and neglect, fallen into disuse, people are readily induced to adopt it again, and take to it without difficulty.

'Like most successful Indian administrators he (Mr. Jameson) took counsel of the people of the country, and at their desire the old system was reverted to. The town was divided into wards, and 'myoganlugyis,' which is the Burmese translation of aldermen, were appointed, who undertook to help the police to supervise bad characters and prevent crime. The system has been worked now for nearly ten years without legislative sanction, and, as the Chief Commissioner reports, since that time Rangoon has been remarkably free from crimes of violence, and it is generally believed that the myoganlugyi system has contributed materially to its immunity from disturbance.'

"This statement has come in very opportunely to complete the series of experiences of other provinces, and it lends strong support to the principle affirmed in the amendment which was carried last Saturday, the principle that the people themselves should be led to co-operate with the Government in the working of the rural police."

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder spoke in reply as follows:—"I do not wish to detain the Council, as the learned Advocate-General has very ably and exhaustively replied to the arguments of the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton, but I will only make one or two remarks with reference to them. I am very glad to find that the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton is willing to consider favourably the application of the principle of local self-government to rural villages, but he is anxious that it should be done cautiously. But by opposing my motion he is doing just the opposite of what his views on this point seem to be, because he is trying to take away from these village people the little power which they possess. He is willing to give villagers power to look after the sanitation and drainage of the village and so forth, but he is not willing to allow the representatives of a village to determine how many chaukidars they want for the purpose of protecting their own lives and property. This, he thinks, is a very large power which they are not fit to use. The hon'ble member would not, therefore, agree to the retention of this power by the panchayat. But after all, what is this power? It has been very correctly described by the Hon'ble Mr. Allen. It is this. Whether this power is exercised by the District authorities or by the panchayat, there cannot be more than one chaukidar for 60 houses. Then, again, the amendment which I propose limits also the minimum number of chaukidars which the panchayat must employ, that is to say, it must not be less than two chaukidars for every 150 houses and one chaukidar for every 100 houses above 150. So that it comes to this, that if this power is allowed to be exercised by panchayats, they will have a discretion to appoint one chaukidar between 75 and 60 houses and nothing more.

"I cannot understand what bearing this question has on the administration of criminal justice in the country. For the purpose of the more efficient administration of criminal justice, it may be necessary to have a far larger number of chaukidars than the Act provides. It may be necessary to have one chaukidar for 20 houses. I can well understand that. But what bearing can that have upon the question whether there should be one chaukidar for 60 houses or one for 75 houses? What bearing the determination of that question can have upon the administration of criminal justice I cannot understand.

"Then the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton referred to Act XX of 1856. Was not that Act before this Council in 1870 and in 1886, and were not all the evils which were complained of by the former Police Commission and by the local officers before the Council on those occasions? If they were, and if this Council thought that, even under those circumstances, the powers of the panchayat ought not to be taken away, why should we now, upon the same grounds and the same materials—for nothing has been shown to have occurred between 1886 and the present time which would alter the circumstances of the case—take away those powers from the panchayat? The Hon'ble Mr. Lambert has been good enough to say that the system of the panchayat has failed. We all know that it has failed; it was reported before 1859 that it had been a failure; therefore it has been a failure all along, and notwithstanding that this Council in 1886 thought proper to retain those powers. And they must have done so for a very good reason. I think the reason was this, that if the panchayat system is to be retained at all, it is very necessary that some power, beyond the assessment and collection of the rate, should be given to them; otherwise no responsible person would come forward to serve on the panchayat. If the panchayat system is to be kept intact, as this Act seeks to do, I submit that these powers ought not to be taken away from them."

The HON'BLE THE PRESIDENT said:—"I will add as little as possible to the very discursive discussion which has taken place on this amendment, especially so, because I so entirely agree with what fell from two hon'ble members on my right, who pointed out how extremely small is the discretion proposed to be allowed to the panchayat by the amendment.

"With reference to what was recently said in the Supreme Council with regard to the Burma Bill, I have not had an opportunity of reading the whole proceedings myself, but from what I happened to see this morning in a Calcutta paper in which the subject was taken up, I gather that an idea exists that the proposal there made is of a different nature from the sort of legislation with which we are now concerned. This seems to me a mistake. I understand Sir Charles Crosthwaite to have said: 'We have introduced within the last ten years a system of working through the heads of villages as policemen, we find it extremely good, and we are going now to legalise it.' Similarly, we say here: 'We have appointed a strong Police Committee, who have considered the working of the Act, and have found it extremely bad, and we are going to amend it.' As far as I can judge, the lines on which we are proceeding correspond closely to those which are being followed in the Viceroy's Council, since the principle in both cases is to base legislation upon practical experience.

"I only wish to add, with regard to the three amendments proposed by the Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder, and which I will take together since, as he says, they are very much the same in character, that my personal view on the subject inclines me to follow entirely the recommendations of the Committee. The Committee, as you will remember, made three recommendations which are to be found in page 116 of their report. Recommendation No. 3 is the one which my hon'ble friend proposes to replace, and in so far as he proposes to replace what is recommended by the Committee, I am in accord with him. The other two recommendations of the Committee to which I refer are that the panchayat should not have the power of appointing the chaukidar or of fixing his pay, but that the pay should be fixed by the Magistrate, and that the chaukidar should be appointed by him. I trust that the Committee will not dissent from those conclusions on which our Bill is based.

"Before putting the amendment to the vote, I wish to point out that it consists of two parts, only one of which has been the subject of debate; the other has been very slightly touched upon, and perhaps it will be found that it has the assent of the Council. Therefore I shall put the two parts of the amendment separately."

The HON'BLE THE PRESIDENT then put the first clause of the Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder's amendment, which stood as follows:—

'The panchayat shall, subject to the control of the District Magistrate, determine the number of chaukidars to be employed in a village.'

The amendment was negatived, on the following division:—

Ayes 4.	Noes 7.
The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder.	The Hon'ble Mr. Playfair.
„ „ Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar.	„ „ Maharajah Sir Harendra Kishore Sing Bahadur.
„ „ Mr. Risley.	„ „ Mr. Wallis.
„ „ „ Woodroffe.	„ „ Shahzada Mahommed Furrokh Shah.
	„ „ Mr. Lambert.
	„ „ „ Cotton.
	„ „ „ Allen

The HON'BLE THE PRESIDENT put the 2nd clause of the amendment which runs thus:—

'Provided that there shall be at least two chaukidars appointed in every village in which there are 150 houses, and one additional chaukidar for every complete 100 houses beyond such number.'

This amendment was also negatived on the following division:—

Ayes 4.	Noes 7.
The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder.	The Hon'ble Mr. Playfair.
„ „ Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar.	„ „ Maharajah Sir Harendra Kishore Sing Bahadur.
„ „ Mr. Risley.	„ „ Mr. Wallis
„ „ „ Woodroffe.	„ „ Shahzada Mahommed Furrokh Shah.
	„ „ Mr. Lambert.
	„ „ „ Cotton.
	„ „ „ Allen.

The HON'BLE BABU GONESH CHUNDER CHUNDER, in moving the next amendment, that in section 5, after the words 'determined by,' the words 'the panchayat subject to the control of,' be inserted, said:—"After the fate of my first amendment I do not think I can hope to be more fortunate with this one. The object of putting into the hands of the Magistrate the power of fixing the pay of the chaukidar is based upon the fact that in some places it was found that the panchayat did not give the chaukidars adequate pay. It seems to me that the panchayat, consisting as they do of men who are every day dealing with local labour, are in a better position to determine what the pay of the chaukidar should be, than the Magistrate, who would have to depend entirely on police reports."

The HON'BLE MR COTTON said:—"As this amendment involves the same principle as that upon which the last amendment was based, and as that principle has been practically decided by the vote which has just been taken, I do not think it necessary to detain the Council with any further remarks."

The amendment was put to the vote and negatived on the following division:—

Ayes 4.	Noes 7.
The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder.	The Hon'ble Mr. Playfair.
„ „ Dr Mahendra Lal Sircar.	„ „ Maharajah Sir Harendra Kishore Sing Bahadur.
„ „ Mr. Risley.	„ „ Mr. Wallis.
„ „ „ Woodroffe.	„ „ Shahzada Mahommed Furrokh Shah.
	„ „ Mr. Lambert.
	„ „ „ Cotton.
	„ „ „ Allen.

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton moved that the following proviso be added to section 7—'Provided that the members of a panchayat appointed under this Act shall not be liable to any assessment.' He said—"I am saved from troubling the Council at any length owing to the remarks I have already made on the subject of the constitution and attributions of the panchayat. I admit that it is undoubtedly a weak point in the Bill that the panchayat is retained to undertake the invidious duties of assessment and collection, and if any better alternative can be suggested, I shall have no objection to strike out the panchayat altogether so far as the administration of the Chaukidari Act is concerned, and to provide for the funds necessary to pay the chaukidars in some other way. No other scheme has, however, been put forward in this debate, and I believe that the existing procedure is open to less objection than any other that can be devised. But it is well to recognise that these functions of assessment and collection are invidious and unwelcome to the headmen of the village community on whom they are imposed, and that it is expedient therefore to afford any recognition of the services of the panchayat that may render their position more endurable than it would be if there was nothing but this invidious duty to perform. It is not easy to suggest any means of reconciling the panchayat to their duties beyond a vague recognition of their services, and in order to induce them to accept the appointment with greater willingness, it has, after consideration, been thought expedient to declare by law that they should themselves be exempted from assessment. This has been proposed by two or three district officers, and though not free from objection in itself, yet it is a fair and reasonable suggestion. If there is any means of rendering the office of panchayat a more acceptable one, the Government will be glad to consider it. It is a very important point to which the Government has given its attention, and as no other means seemed to fall within the purview of legislation, this one is proposed, and I hope the Council will not see any objection to it."

The Hon'ble Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar said:—"I am always most reluctant to oppose anything that proceeds from the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton. But in the present, as in all the previous intances, I am compelled to do so out of a sense of duty. I am convinced that if this amendment, which gives to the panchayat exemption from assessment, is carried, it would have a very seriously injurious effect upon the personnel of the panchayat. The exemption would act as a sort of bribe to induce men to belong to the panchayat, and to a dead certainty the worst and not the best men would succeed. To compare great thing with small, I would quote the high authority of John Stuart Mill, whom my hon'ble friend is so fond of quoting, on the effect that would inevitably result if Members of Parliament were remunerated. 'It will amount,' says he, 'to offering 658 prizes for the most successful flatterer, the most adroit misleader of his countrymen. As Mr. Lorimer remarks, by creating a pecuniary inducement to persons of the lowest class to devote themselves to public affairs, the calling of the demagogue would be formally inaugurated. Nothing more ought to be deprecated than making it the private interest of a number of persons to urge the form of Government in the direction of its natural perversion. The indications which either a multitude or an individual can give, when merely left to their own weaknesses, afford but a faint idea of what those weaknesses would become when played upon by a thousand flatterers.' If this is likely to happen in the most advanced of civilized countries, can we expect anything better in the villages of Bengal? It is, therefore, becaus· of the obvious and inevitable demoralizing influence which exemption of the panchayat from taxation would exercise upon their selection that I am compelled to oppose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe said:—"I do not look upon this as an attempt to bribe, but the objection might be put in this way—that it suggests to the proviso a conflict between interest and duty on the part of the members of the panchayat."

The Hon'ble Mr. Wallis said:—"I regret I cannot see my way to support the amendment, for section XV provides that in no case can the amount to be assessed on any one person be in excess of Re. 1 per mensem; it would therefore not be adding to the dignity of the office to offer to exempt members of the panchayat from an annual payment of Rs. 12."

The amendment was put to the vote and negatived on the following division:—

Ayes 4.	Noes 7.
The Hon'ble Mr. Playfair.	The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder.
„ „ Maharajah Sir Harendra Kishore Sing Bahadur.	„ „ Mr. Wallis
„ „ Mr. Risley.	„ „ Shahzada Mahommed Furrokh Shah.
„ „ „ Cotton.	„ „ Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar.
	„ „ Mr. Lambert.
	„ „ „ Allen.
	„ „ „ Woodroffe.

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder moved that for section 8, the following be substituted:—

'(1) The panchayat shall appoint chaukidars under this Act, subject to the approval of the Magistrate.

'Provided that if the panchayat fail to appoint chaukidars within a reasonable time, or the Magistrate does not, for reasons to be recorded by him in writing, approve of the chaukidars or any of them so appointed, the Magistrate shall appoint such residents or resident as he thinks fit to be the chaukidars or chaukidar.

'(2) The District Magistrate, or the panchayat, with the sanction of the District Magistrate, may from time to time dismiss any chaukidar so appointed.'

He said:—"I think this amendment will share the same fate as the preceding one which I have moved, but still I shall state what I have to say on the point. I would like to point out that when Act I of 1886 was under the consideration of the Council, the proposals contained in the present Bill were brought forward by Mr. Garrett, now District Judge of the 24-Parganas. He proposed that village watchmen should be nominated by panchayats, but should be appointed by the Magistrate of the district; but his proposal was negatived. Besides that, there is this objection, that if you pass this Bill as it has been amended by the Select Committee, you will have to repeal section 36 of Act VI of 1870."

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said:—"Section 9 of this Bill does repeal section 36 of Act VI of 1870. It was thought that it would materially raise the status of the village watchman if he derived his appointment directly from the Magistrate. A good deal depends on form in such matters. One of the great defects in the constitution of the village watchmen is that they are drawn from the lowest classes—the dregs of society. In most mufassal localities low class men are associated with the village watch, and it has always been the effort of the Government to try and improve this state of things. The present is one of those efforts which I trust will be more successful than its predecessors, and it is hoped it will lead to the appointment of a superior class of men. The principal reason why the power of nomination is left to the panchayat is that local men may be appointed. It is no doubt very important to retain the local knowledge of the village watchman and to see that an outsider is not ordinarily appointed."

The Hon'ble the President said:—"I have already said a few words on the subject of this amendment. I look upon this power as a matter of great importance, and that it will enable us to do away with a serious evil, which this amendment would perpetuate. It is well known to all that the Bengal chaukidar is at present in almost all cases a member of the lowest caste. When I was a district officer in the North-Western Provinces it was the same; the chaukidar was either a Dhanuk or a Pasi or a Bauria or a Barwar, or of some other of the very lowest and most criminal classes. It is just about twenty years ago that an Act was passed by which the chaukidars in the North-Western Provinces were paid for by a local rate and were brought under the discipline of the Magistrate. The Police Committee appointed in 1890 in the North-Western Provinces referred to the great advance which has been made there by substituting people of higher castes, Rajputs and Muhammadans, instead of those lowest class men. I do not at this moment recollect the exact figures they gave; but I remember that last year's Police Report showed that out of 6,000 vacancies which took place within the year, only about 1,000 were filled up by members of the lower classes, such as were formerly appointed, and the remaining 5,000 by men belonging to the higher classes. I trust that, when the power of appointment is vested in the Magistrate, as it will be under this Bill, it will help to attain the same result, which I am sure you will all agree with me is most desirable."

The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder's amendment was put and negatived on the following division:—

Ayes 2.	Noes 9.
The Hon'ble Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder.	The Hon'ble Mr. Playfair.
„ „ Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar.	„ „ Maharaja Sir Harendra Kishore Sing Bahadur.
	„ „ Mr. Wallis.
	„ „ Shahzada Mahommed Furrokh Shah.
	„ „ Mr. Lambert.
	„ „ „ Risley.
	„ „ „ Cotton.
	„ „ „ Allen.
	„ „ „ Woodroffe.

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe moved that in section 10, after the word 'duties' the words 'within or in relation to the village of which he is chaukidar' be inserted; also that in the 2nd sub-section of the same section, for the words 'outside of it' the words 'in any adjoining village' be substituted; also that in the 8th sub-section of the same section, after the word 'two' the word 'consecutive' be inserted. He said:—"I think this amendment is not one which will involve much discussion. I understand that the notion of a village chaukidar is that of a person who has village duties in the shape of watch and ward, and the only object of my amendment is to make that clear, which I doubt not was the intention of the framers of the Act. It is manifestly not intended that he should be a man paid by the village for duties to be performed in a distant part of the country unconnected in any way with the village to which he is appointed. The second portion of my amendment will enable him, if there has been any riot or disturbance in an adjoining village, to act in relation thereto, and to bring to the notice of the police the gathering of bad characters in the neighbourhood. And the third portion of the amendment is to express clearly what I take to be the meaning of the section, namely, that the absence should be for two consecutive months."

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said:—"I regret that this amendment is one which I think should be opposed. It is an innovation. It is a restriction on the powers of the chaukidar, which has never been imposed in Bengal or, as far as I am aware, in any province in India. It is perfectly true that the main function of the chaukidar is purely local. At the same time to lay down by law that his duties shall not extend beyond the village is likely to prove embarrassing in practice. The chaukidar does not spend his whole time in the village. One very important duty is his (generally) weekly visit to the thána. In traversing the road across country from his village to the thána he passes through many villages, and he may not improbably be called upon by the panchayat or chaukidar in another village to assist him in the apprehension of a criminal or to quell a riot; or it may come to his knowledge that there is a gang of thieves in the neighbourhood, a fact of which it is for the well being of his own village that he should acquaint himself and report to the police; and it will be very embarrassing to legislate him out of such duties and powers; powers which he will certainly exercise whether you legislate him out of them or not. This is a law for the guidance of our executive officers as between themselves; it is not a law for the protection of the public in particular; and as such, in other provinces, these matters are left to be determined by rules framed by the Government. In Bengal we have preferred to adopt exact law, but we have always endeavoured not to be too rigid. These powers have always been exercised by chaukidars in the mufassal and no one has ever objected to them, and the Bill merely legalises the existing practice. To restrict these powers by minute legislation such as the Advocate-General proposes will be contrary to the spirit of the Act, and will undoubtedly prove embarrassing. I shall therefore venture to hope that the Council will leave the section as it stands."

The Hon'ble Mr. Wallis said:—"I cannot quite understand the proposals made by the learned Advocate-General, because I think the first portion of his amendment is contradicted by the second. It appears to me that by the insertion of the words in the first sub-section, 'within or in relation to the village of which he is chaukidar,' limits his duties to the village in which he is paid, and in the second sub-section the words of the amendment seem to provide for his having certain powers outside the village to which he belongs, and I therefore fail to understand how the two portions of the amendment can be reconciled."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe said:—"I understand there is no objection to the insertion of the word 'consecutive' so as to make it express absence for two consecutive months, which, I suppose, is what is intended. For the rest, the object of the amendment is to denote that the duties of the chaukidar are primarily for the village, and that explains the apparent contradiction to which the Hon'ble Mr. Wallis has referred. For my own part I should have preferred to leave out the words 'or outside of it,' but on consideration I thought that if an arrest were made near the boundaries of the village it might be doubtful whether the duty was performed in relation to the village."

The Hon'ble the President said:—"The only fear I have in this matter is that which has been expressed by the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton, whether you are not by these words creating a technicality by means of which a great many persons may get off. We know how often it happens that, through some quibble of the law, men whom every one knows to be guilty have to be released. The boundaries of villages are not very certain, and it would be very unfortunate if a chaukidar had arrested a burglar, and the case broke down on the ground that the place where he committed the crime, or where he was arrested, was not within the chaukidar's village or an adjoining village. I should be very glad if the Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe can assure us that there is no danger of such a fiasco occurring in consequence of this restriction.

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe said:—"I think, with reference to arrests, my amendment may give rise to some difficulty—not that a guilty person would get off, but that the chaukidar might be held to have exceeded his duty. But having regard to the doubt which has been suggested, and after what has fallen from the President, I would ask leave to withdraw the first and second portions of my amendment."

The first and second portions of the amendment were, by leave, withdrawn, and the motion to insert in the 8th sub-section of section 10 the word 'consecutive' after the word 'two' was agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe moved that the following proviso be added at the end of section 10:—

'Provided always that no chaukidar appointed under the provisions of this Act shall be employed by any police officer on his private concern, or on any duties not by this Act made obligatory on such chaukidar.'

He said:—"The Council is probably aware that this is practically the re-enactment of a provision to be found in Regulation XX of 1817, by which, under section 21, sub-section (8) darogahs and police officers are prohibited from employing police officers and village watchmen on their own private concerns. From what has been decided by the Council and has fallen from the President in the matter, it seems to be the general idea, that everything that can be done reasonably should be done to secure a better class of chaukidars. The President has pointed to the low condition of the chaukidars in this province, and how, owing to measures having been taken to alter that state of things in the North-Western Provinces, a better class of persons has been there secured. There is in the Police Committee's report abundant evidence of the unfortunate state of things in which the chaukidar often finds himself. Among various notes and minutes on this Bill, I find the Magistrate of Murshidabad saying that the chaukidars are pretty well the slaves of police officers both at the thána and in the mufassal. In a note by Rai Nundkishore Das Bahadur which receives the assent of Mr. Toynbee, Commissioner of Orissa, he says:—'He is very frequently detained in the police-stations for the purpose of keeping watch and ward over the police-station, tilling the head-constable's garden land, and doing divers other works assigned to him.' Further, Babu Juggomohun Roy, late Deputy Magistrate and Collector, says:—'I think a better class would come forward if only they saw that the post does not necessarily involve the doing of the various sort of degrading services on which chaukidars are not unoften employed. They are the luggage bearers of constables and head-constables, and drawers of water and hewers of wood and grass-cutters at the stations and outposts,' a view of the position which the Commissioner admits and trusts to see remedied. Again, the Officiating Magistrate of Malda, described by the Commissioner of Bhagalpur as an efficient native gentleman occupying an important official position, says:—'The thána officers expect the village chaukidar to do all sorts of menial duties for them, to cut their grass, rub their horses, clean their compounds and water their trees and plants, hew their wood and draw their water and carry their loads. This destroys all self-respect in the chaukidar; he is beside the slave of the writer-constable, who takes his weekly attendance.'

"The Bhagalpur Landholder's Association say:—'If the chaukidars be not subjected to ill-treatment by the police and be freed from having to do menial duties for them, a better class of men would come in to serve as chaukidars, and much of the evil now existing would be removed.'

"I think the Council will see that there is sufficient justification for this amendment. We want to have a better class of chaukidars. I believe a proposal of this kind was brought up in some form in the Select Committee, but then it was thought that to embody it in the Bill would necessitate the imposition of penalties for exacting such duties. That was rejected as being outside the scope of the Bill, and therefore I have not proposed any penalty clause in this amendment. It will be sufficient as a note of warning to the chaukidar that he is not bound to do such things. If, on the face of that, officers of police make use of chaukidars for such purpose, they can complain to the Magistrate, who can deal with the complaint departmentally. The object in view is to get as good a class of men as possible to be chaukidars, and doubtless by this means the Magistrate will be able, when appointing chaukidars, to tell them that they are not expected to perform such duties for police officers.

The Hon'ble Mr. Cotton said:—"This is exactly one of those provisions of an impractical character which should not be introduced into legislation at all. I do not think it is the business of the Council or of any legislature to lay down rules for the guidance of the relations between the daroga or the head-constable and the village chaukidar. If the Local Government possesses any powers at all, it possesses ample powers for such purpose, and that is why, when the Act of 1870 was passed, such provisions or their equivalent, which undoubtedly existed in the Regulation of 1817, were repealed. It is perfectly true that the chaukidar is commonly used in the mufassal by the daroga and other police officers as their servants, and so long as human nature remains as it is, until at least the character of the Bengali very materially changes, so long such practices will continue. When the daroga goes into the village to enquire into a crime he will shout to the chaukidar and will utilize the chaukidar in his service as long as he remains in the village. When the chaukidar comes to give his hazree in the thána, if the thána has to be swept, the chaukidar will be told to do it. A brutum fulmen of this kind in the law will not affect the procedure in this respect any more than the clause in the Regulation of 1817 affected the relations between the chaukidar and the police. As time advances no doubt improved relations may be expected to exist, but it is in accordance with my experience of this country that subordinate officers will always be utilized by higher officers on their own personal concerns. How many high officers of Government are there who do not habitually employ Government chaprásis in their private work. It is a recognized and understood thing. If it is abused it becomes a scandal and should be put down. I believe the daroga does occasionally abuse his power and goes too far; but you cannot stop it by legislation, and this is not a proper provision to introduce into a law. These are matters which should be left to the Lieutenant-Governor and the Inspector-General of Police."

The Hon'ble Mr. Lambert said:—"I think it should be known to the Council that even if the practice exists to any large extent of the employment of chaukidars by Sub-Inspectors and by Head-Constables, it certainly has not the sanction of the higher officers of police, who are responsible for the control of their subordinates. The rule which formed a part of Regulation XX of 1817, now finds a place in the Police Manual issued by the Inspector-General for the guidance of police officers; and I am sure it will assist the Inspector-General and the District Superintendents to know that the provision which is now proposed is given a place in this law and not in the Police Manual only, and also that the chaukidar should know that it is not incumbent upon him to perform such services. I shall be very glad to see this proviso find a place in this Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Allen said:—"I think that a proviso which declares a certain thing to be unlawful and provides no penalty as a sanction to prevent such unlawful thing being done comes very much under Shakespere's censure of making 'a scarecrow of the law for daws to peck at.' To put sections into a law declaring an act unlawful, and to impose no penalty on the persons who do that unlawful act, is an idle faaco. This provision has been in existence for seventy-five years, and how ineffective it has been is shown by the reports which have been read by the learned Advocate-General. The Executive Government and the heads of police are quite competent to check the practice and to prevent it becoming excessive. But there are numbers of matters in which it is perfectly right that the chaukidar should be employed by Sub-Inspectors, though they may be properly called private purposes. Suppose a Sub-Inspector goes to a village to investigate a case. As he is trotting along on his pony, the pony comes on his nose and the Sub-Inspector is landed in a paddy khet. The pony trots off, and the Sub-Inspector shouts out to a chaukidar pakro pakro. Oh, says the chaukidar, it is not lawful to employ me on your private affairs, catch your pony yourself. There are numbers of other instances might be put in which it is impossible to say whether the work done is public or private. Probably the Sub-Inspector would say 'catching his pony was not private but public work as he was on duty.' Then, again, what constitutes 'employment.' It is much better that things of this kind should not find a place in the Bill. If we are not prepared to provide a penalty, we had better leave the provision out. I have no doubt that the higher officers of police are quite as desirous as any one here to prevent abuses in this matter, but I am afraid many years will have to pass before they will succeed in stopping what is the custom of the country. Visit any civil court between this and Murshidabad, go to the Nazir's house, and how many peons on the court's establishment will you find on duty there. It is the practice of the country that every man in authority employs the men immediately under him on his own affairs, and his subordinates are only too well pleased to be so employed in the hope of thereby recommending themselves to his favourable notice."

The Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe said:—"No more forcible argument could be used in support of my amendment than that which has just fallen from the Hon'ble Mr. Allen. If according to him it is the prevailing rule in the country that people in authority use those under them to discharge personal duties to themselves, the sooner and the more distinctly it is known that it is wrong, the better. Of course it is easy to throw ridicule on any proposition. I don't suppose any reasonable man would have thought for one moment that the catching of a pony for a Sub-Inspector would amount to the performance of menial offices. As to the provision having been in existence for seventy-five years, I can only point out that that clause was unfortunately repealed in 1870 as regards all villages to which Act VI of that year was made applicable. Therefore the present state of things is the outcome in a large measure of that repeal. No answer has been made to what I pointed out, namely, that if you make this amendment you take steps towards securing a better class of chaukidars.

"I have no objection, if the Council think fit, to add to the provision any penalty that may be desired. But I venture to think that a remark of a highly practical character fell from the Hon'ble Mr. Lambert, familiar as he is with the practice and duties of the police, when he stated that it would be a great help to the superior officers to find in the law a clear enunciation and limitation of the duties of the chaukidars. We should then have some reasonable expectation of getting a better class of chaukidars. Under the Regulation of 1817, the penalty is 'under pain of dismissal from office,' or if that be thought too severe, it might be under such penalty as may be awarded by the proper police authority."

The HON'BLE THE PRESIDENT said:—"Every member of Council must feel warm sympathy with the Hon'ble Mr. Woodroffe as to the motive of this amendment, and if anything of the kind still went on as is described in the extracts which had been read, it would be a death-blow to any reform. It is absolutely necessary that this sort of degradation of these public officers should be put a stop to, and I am sure I shall have the support of all the officers of the Executive Government in putting down such practices. At the same I entirely concur with what fell from the Hon'ble Mr. Allen, and I am delighted to hear an expression of the views I have long held myself, and which are not sufficiently attended to in any Council which drafts laws in India, views which would have saved us a great deal of trouble if it had always been held that penalties should be exacted in all cases in which duties are prescribed. For instance, it has been provided that the Local Government should send in a report within a certain date, but in certain Acts there is no penalty attached in cases of non-compliance, and such provisions tend to bring the law into disrepute. Therefore if the Council allows this amendment to pass, I trust they will also allow a further amendment to be put at a future stage of the Bill imposing a penalty for the breach of the rule, and that the Hon'ble the Advocate-General will consider it in the meantime.

The Motion was then put and carried on the following division :—

Ayes 7.	Noes 4.
The Hon'ble Mr. Playfair,	The Hon'ble Maharajah Sir Harendra Kishore Sing Bahadur,
" " Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder.	" " Mr. Wallis.
" " Shahzada Mahommed Furrokh Shah.	" " " Cotton.
" " Dr. Mohendra Lal Sircar.	" " " Allen.
" " Mr. Lambert.
" " " Risley.
" " " Woodroffe.

The HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE moved that in section 43 of Act VI of 1870, as amended by section 10 of Act I of 1886, for the words 'or person as the Magistrate shall appoint' the words 'as the Local Government may by rules made under this Act prescribe or direct' be substituted; and that such amendment, if allowed, be numbered section 12 of the Bill, and the subsequent sections be re-numbered. He said :—"The vote which has just been passed emboldens me to conclude that this amendment will also receive the assent of the majority of the Council. The matter in issue is one which bears directly on the point we have just now been considering, namely, the improvement of the condition of the chaukidar, and perhaps possibly of obtaining a better description of men. Under section 43 of Act VI of 1870, it is provided that 'Every chaukidar shall receive month by month the full amount of his salary from the member of the panchayat appointed to collect the tax'

"That section at all events was definite. It stated the time when the money was to be paid, the amount to be received, and the persons from whom it was to be received; but I venture to think that the amendment introduced in 1886 by the Legislature left the matter of payment in a very unsatisfactory state by enacting. 'The chaukidar shall receive quarter by quarter the full amount of his salary from such officer or person as the Magistate may appoint.' The report of the Police Committee shows that it has been attended with the most disastrous results. There is no sort of system; no sort of order. The Police Committee consider this matter to be one of the most important possible, and yet, strange to say, there is not in the Bill as drafted, nor as it has been amended by the Select Committee, any provision on the subject. In paragraph 50 of their report the Police Committee say :—

'The payment of chaukidars is the principal and essential point in the opinion of most officers and much attention is paid to it, though the systems in force in different districts vary very much. In the 24-Parganas, where a late Magistrate, Mr. A Forbes, has given very great attention to the matter, an elaborate system has been in force since 1886 which has been very successful in securing punctual payment to the chaukidars. Once a quarter, on a date fixed and notified to the panchayat beforehand, the District Superintendent of Police, the Subdivisional Officer, a Deputy Magistrate, or a Police Inspector appointed by the Magistrate of the district under section 44, goes to each police-station and outpost, and is there met by all the chaukidars of that jurisdiction. The collecting member of the panchayat also attends with the chaukidars' pay for the past three months, which is then and there paid to him in presence of the presiding officer, and the payment entered in a register kept for the purpose. To avoid harassing the panchayats, they are allowed, when it is not convenient to attend in person, to send the money by some other person or by the chaukidar. When the payments are completed, a return of all cases of default is submitted to the Magistrate, who issues a distress warrant under section 45 on the panchayat. The peon who executes the warrant pays the money into court, whence it is disbursed to the chaukidars. Under this system the number of chaukidars in arrear has sunk to a very small proportion, and the pay of these is realised by warrant in an average period of 24 days from the fixed date of payment. The chaukidars are said not only in this district, but throughout these provinces, to prefer monthly payments, and are alleged to borrow from panchayats and mahajans money to go on with till the next quarter's salary is due; but to carry out monthly payments in the manner above described would undoubtedly be too great a strain on the supervising staff, and must for the present be given up as impracticable. The acquittance rolls prescribed by Government notification of 17th March 1877, paragraph 9, have been discontinued in this district; acquittance registers are kept instead at each thána and outpost, and these are said to be more effectual than the old rolls which were kept by the chaukidars themselves.'

"Then they proceed to recommend a system of payment. But that not having been accepted it occurred to me that the Executive Government should make rules which should be uniform and apply them throughout the country at large. There will not then be the uncertainty and delay consequent on the want of system referred to in the report, and the chaukidar will know from whom he has to get his pay, and when and where. He will no longer be driven from pillar to post: there will be some order and some regularity.

"Since the publication of the Police Committee's report there have been many expressions of opinion. Mr. Forbes, Commissioner of Dacca, says:—'As regards the question of the steps to be taken to secure the regular collection of the tax and the payment of the chaukidars, I would invite your attention to the scheme I introduced in the 24-Parganas district. It is noticed in paragraphs 50 and 51 of the Committee's report. The Committee disapprove of it on the ground that it entails considerable labour on the Government officials, and apparently also for the curious reason that the more punctually the chaukidars are paid, the worse they work. This is a rather startling theory, considering the object of the Committee's report. If it were only true, they might have been spared their labours.'

"Again, the Magistrate of Birbhum says:—'The greatest evil by far is the admitted fact that under the Act the chaukidars do not get paid either fully or punctually; and I say emphatically that the sufficient and punctual pay of the chaukidars is absolutely essential—a sine quâ non in reform of the system—without which any reform is hopelessly impossible.'

"Mr. Oldham, Commissioner of Chittagong, says:—'The greatest difficulty to me in the draft Bill is as regards the arrangements which will have to be made for paying the chaukidars. The point on which I lay most stress is the original work which it intends to lay on the District Magistrates' But in the scheme which finds a place in the amendment which I move, I do not see any reason to suppose that there will be a considerable amount of work laid upon the District Magistrate. It would be entirely in the hands of the Local Government to prescribe by whom and where the payment should be made."

The Hon'ble Mr. Lambert said:—"It appears to me that the learned Advocate-General has hit upon the weak point of the Bill. The object of this Bill is to make the village police more efficient and to procure in each village the best man available for the post. To this end the Bill makes certain changes in the mode of appointment of the chaukidar and in other cognate matters. It also defines more accurately the duties which the State requires of him as its servant But though the chaukidar's duties are enlarged and increased responsibility is cast on him, there is nothing in the Bill to improve his position or to provide that his appointment will be secured if he is honest in the discharge of the duties imposed on him.

"It need hardly be pointed out that before the Government can reasonably hope to obtain proper assistance from the village chaukidar, it must at least secure him in his position, and let him feel that, so long as he does his duty, he will get his full pay regularly, and be maintained in his office. That chaukidars are, in the majority of districts, not regularly paid, is abundantly shown by what we have heard from the learned Advocate-General.

"It is, as I understand it, one of the objects of the present legislation to deal with the defects brought to notice in the report of the Committee, and therefore, I trust, that the present opportunity will not be lost to effect some substantial improvement in this most important part of the subject—that of payment of chaukidars.

"It appears to me, that all legislation in connection with the chaukidari system will be nearly infractuous, unless provision is made at the same time for securing the chaukidar in his position, and this can be done only by making provision for the punctual payment of his salary.

"Hitherto the arrangement of this matter has been left to the discretion of the various district officers, and it is, I think, proved by the report of the Committee, that precise rules are required to secure uniformity on this very important subject. On these grounds I beg to say that I heartily support the motion of the learned Advocate-General."

The Motion was put and carried unanimously.

The HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE moved that in section 12 after the word 'village' the words 'or group of villages' be inserted. The amendment, he said, was a purely clerical one. A tahsildar might be needed for the collection of rents in a village or a group of villages.

It having been pointed out that there were other sections in the Bill in which the words 'a village' were only used, while in some sections both the expressions appeared, the further consideration of this amendment was postponed for a proper examination of the various sections of the Bill.

The HON'BLE MR. WOODROFFE, moved that, in section 13 of the Bill, there be inserted after the word 'notice' the words 'in writing,' and between the words 'or' and 'neglect' the words 'after the lapse of a reasonable time in that behalf'; also that the word 'forthwith' be omitted, and that for the word 'person' the words 'other Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him' be substituted. He said:—"The question is whether the notice on the panchayat should not be in writing so as to afford a security that the notice has been served. And the amendment also provides that after such notice is served a reasonable time should be given, if there be neglect, before the Magistrate begins to exercise the powers mentioned in the section. It seems to me rather a harsh proceeding to suddenly terminate the functions and powers which remain vested in the panchayat by a notice which may be misunderstood."

The HON'BLE MR. COTTON said:—"I have no particular objection to the amendment. The law, as it stands in regard to all this procedure, has been in force for many years, and there has never been found any difficulty in the matter, but I do not care to oppose what has been proposed."

The amendment was put to the vote and carried on the following division:—

The HON'BLE THE PRESIDENT, in adjourning the Council to Saturday, the 20th August next, said:—"I hope by that time this Bill, as now amended by the Council, will be printed and circulated to hon'ble members. Some verbal amendments may still be needed to fit in the different parts of the Bill to suit the alterations which have been made, and a little time will be required for the due consideration of the Bill as a whole, but, as far as I understand, the principle of the Bill has been settled, and I hope the Council will be able to pass the Bill finally on the 20th of August.

The Council adjourned to Saturday, the 20th August, 1892.

CALCUTTA;
The 15th August, 1892.

E. W. ORMOND,
Offg. Assistant Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal,
Legislative Department.

DISTRESS IN BENGAL.

The 16th August 1892.—The following is published for general information.

W. MAUDE,
Offg. Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal.

No. 3081Agri., dated Calcutta, the 16th August 1892.

From—W. MAUDE, Esq., Offg. Secy. to the Govt. of Bengal, Revenue Dept.,
To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Revenue and Agricultural Dept.

IN continuation of the report submitted with this Government's letter No. 2682Agri., dated the 15th July 1892, I am directed to submit the following report on the distressed areas of Bengal for the month of July 1892.

2. General condition and prospects of the affected areas.—The rainfall during the month of July in the districts mentioned in paragraph 2 of the last report was as follows, compared with the normal rainfall for that month:—

Muzaffarpur.		Darbhanga.		Monghyr.		Bhágalpur.		Purnea.		Dinajpur.
1892.	Normal.	1892.	Normal.	1892.	Normal.	1892.	Normal.	1892.	Normal.	1892.	Normal.
Inches. 10·44	Inches. 11·81	Inches. 11·19	Inches. 11·89	Inches. 12·57	Inches. 12·35	Inches. 8·18	Inches. 11·16	Inches. 22·44	Inches. 13·89	Inches. 22·27	Inches. 13·45

All present cause for anxiety has practically ceased to exist throughout the affected tracts. In the Patna Division, though indigo has suffered from too much rain, the bhadoi crops everywhere promise a bumper harvest. In Monghyr and Bhágalpur full crops are confidently expected. The floods in the Dinajpur district have done little or no damage to the bhadoi crops, while on the other hand they have facilitated the transplantation of winter rice which has been everywhere pushed on during the month. More rain, however, is required for the purposes of this crop in the affected tracts in the Patna Division.

3. Prices.—Prices remained generally stationary. New marua (eleusine corocana) is coming into the market and a substantial fall in the price of this grain has taken place in Bhágalpur. The price of common rice is still high in Monghyr.

4. Relief works.—Relief works were closed in Dinajpur on the 2nd July, in Muzaffarpur on the 11th, and in Darbhanga on the 19th. As regards the Bhágalpur Division, relief works were closed in Monghyr at the close of the week ending the 23rd July, while those in Bhágalpur are expected to be closed by the middle of the current month. Special famine reports have been discontinued in respect of the districts of Muzaffarpur and Dinajpur. Hence the statements A and B appended to this report refer only to the three districts of Darbhanga, Monghyr and Bhágalpur, of which Bhágalpur is the only district in which relief works were open during the whole month. The number of persons employed on the Bhágalpur works on the last day of the month was 2,147, which therefore represents the number for the entire province.

5. Rates of wages.—A statement is appended in the form used in previous reports showing the number of relief labourers reduced to terms of adult males, the average work done and wage earned by each, the cost of the work, the numbers of recipients of gratuitous relief in terms of adults, the average receipts of each, and the total cost of relief during the month. The figures call for no notice here.

6. Private relief and poor-house relief.—No private relief works were open during the month, with the exception of a few labourers being employed up to the 16th by a landowner in the Jamui subdivision, which, however, is not strictly in the affected area. Nor was it found necessary to open any poor-house during the month.

7. Food-stocks and importation of grains.—Food-stocks are reported to be generally sufficient, while fodder and water are abundant. In Gaya it is reported that food-grains still continue to be imported from the North-Western Provinces, and that about 60,000 maunds were so imported during July. It is expected that the importation will cease as soon as the new crops begin to be harvested.

8. Gratuitous relief.—At the end of the month gratuitous relief was being distributed in only two districts—those of Monghyr and Bhagulpur. The numbers in receipt of this form of relief in the last day of the month were 229 in Monghyr and 948 in Bhagulpur.

9. Death-rate and deaths from starvation.—There have been no deaths from starvation. The death-rate in the Patna Division and Monghyr is reported to be normal, while in Bhagalpur the rate for the district, 2·08, as well as that for the affected tract, 1·49, was considerably lower than in the corresponding month of the previous year, when the district rate was 3·06, and the rate for the affected tract 2·6. The low rates now returned are, however, said by the Civil Surgeon to be probably due to imperfect registration during the present year. The Commissioner's attention has been called to the small rates shown in the present report.

10. Loans.—Statement B shows the amounts advanced as loans under the Agriculturists' Loans Act and the Land Improvement Loans Act. The total amount according to the statement is Rs. 1,26,546, but this figure does not include the amounts advanced in Muzaffarpur and Dinajpur since the end of June, as these districts have been omitted from the divisional returns for July. Final reports have been called for from all districts in which relief operations have been closed, giving full details of all works undertaken, the numbers and averages employed, the average amount of work done and its cost, and the wages earned, the total sums spent, and other necessary particulars.

11. Maps.—Maps of the Bhagalpur and Monghyr districts are enclosed. Maps of the Dinajpur, Muzaffarpur, and Darbhanga districts were not submitted by the Collector, as the early closing of the works in those districts rendered unnecessary the submission of the second Fortnightly Report with which the maps have been from time to time sent.

SUMMARY OF THE METEOROLOGICAL AND RAINFALL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN BENGAL, AND OF THE METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN ASSAM, FOR THE MONTH OF JULY 1892.

DURING the last week of June the monsoon conditions were fairly strongly developed over Bengal, but quite at its close the distribution of pressure became somewhat abnormal, and on the 1st of July there was a distinct band of comparatively high pressure across the head of the Bay, which extended over parts of South Bengal and Orissa. This seemed to partially stop the monsoon current from flowing freely over Bengal, for while almost general rainfall had been reported on the morning of the 1st of July, on the 2nd the falls became decidedly more local and lighter, except over parts of East and North Bengal, and only a light to moderate monsoon was thus affecting the province on the 2nd. From this date up to the 8th there was no practical change in the conditions in Bengal, except that perhaps rainfall was rather increasing in heaviness; but for the whole of this period the monsoon current flowing over the province appeared to be rather lighter than in normal years, and in Orissa, Chota Nagpur, and South-West Bengal at this time the rainfall was both local and decidedly scanty, though in the north of the province very heavy rain was falling.

On the other hand, certain changes were taking place in the Bay which were much more important. Even from the beginning of the month winds had begun to strengthen largely at the Ceylon stations, pointing to the fact that a considerably stronger burst of monsoon winds than there had been since the early part of June was advancing up the Bay. These strong winds commenced about 1st July, and they continued on the 2nd and 3rd, and from the 3rd to the 4th a small storm appeared to form in front of this advance, and on the 4th strong winds began to be reported in the east of the Bay at Diamond Island as well as in the south of the Bay. On the 5th, the centre of the small storm was probably in latitude 15° N., and it was increasing in strength. The stations round the whole of the central parts of the Bay showed distinct cyclonic circulation of winds, and exceptionally strong winds were blowing on the east and south of the storm, probably indicating that the storm itself was at least of moderate strength. From the 4th to the 5th the small storm had advanced slowly in a north-north-westerly direction. On the morning of the 6th it again appeared to have advanced in north-north-westerly direction, and was probably in the latitude of Cocanada, but it had not increased in intensity. On the 7th it had distinctly diminished, and had become a depression of little importance, which apparently existed off the Ganjam coast, and the circulation of winds accompanying it was feeble. Winds had also fallen off rapidly in strength in the east and south of the Bay, and had become light to moderate, and it appeared as if the depression would entirely disappear. On the morning of the 8th the feeble depression with its accompanying light cyclonic circulation of winds still existed off the South Orissa coast with a centre near Gopalpur and there was no change in its intensity. On the 9th, however, a rapid change in conditions had occurred, the residual low-pressure area and cyclonic circulation of winds again suddenly developed, and a very definite barometric depression formed with a centre not far from Puri. Winds in the rear of the storm also strengthened rapidly, and conditions generally in the Bay and partly over Bengal itself on this day were governed by this depression, which was accompanied by a very distinct cyclonic circulation of winds, though they were, however, of only very moderate force. During the night of the 9th the small storm advanced in almost a northerly direction close to the coast, and at 8 A. M. of the 10th its centre was near Balasore and perhaps a few miles to the south-east of that station. Though the storm was by no means intense, it was accompanied by decidedly low pressures, and at 8 A. M. of the 10th Balasore reported a pressure of only 29·286". The small storm was also accompanied by a very perfect cyclonic circulation of winds which affected the whole province, and though the wind force near the centre was comparatively light, yet in its rear very strong monsoon winds were blowing, and these extended over a large part of the Bay. These winds were also on this day being partially swept over Bengal, and hence on the 10th fairly general rain was reported over the whole province. Directly the small storm crossed the coast, it recurved rapidly towards the west as in the case of the severe storm in the early part of June, and thus on the morning of the 11th the centre of the storm and its accompanying cyclonic circulation of winds was in the extreme south of Chota Nagpur to the south-east of Chaibassa. In the rear of the storm a strong wave of monsoon winds swept over the province, and moderate to heavy rain was reported at almost every station on the 11th. On the 12th the storm centre was a little to the north of Sambalpur, so that it had travelled almost due west since the 11th, and it was still accompanied by a rather low pressure and well-defined cyclonic circulation of winds. On the 13th the storm centre was approaching Allahabad, and therefore had travelled west-north-west since the 12th, while on the 14th the depression had practically filled up and disappeared. The small storm therefore travelled over almost precisely the same path as the severe storm of June did; it, in the first instance, strengthened and became a definite storm in almost the position in which the storm of June formed, and indeed it also filled up and disappeared in almost the same position. Strong monsoon winds as usual continued to flow in over the province in the rear of the advancing storm, and up to the 13th and 14th the current was very steady, while rainfall was abundant in all districts.

On the 13th, however, an extremely rapid increase of pressure took place, particularly in South Bengal, amounting in some cases to a fifth of an inch, while on the 14th a further increase of about a sixth of an inch took place at the western stations, and hence pressure on the latter date became more than a tenth of an inch above the normal over the greater part of the province. The monsoon current therefore began to decrease in strength from this time, and a westerly wind current set in over the province, driving back the moist easterly and south-easterly current which had flowed in after the small storm, and on the 15th and 16th winds were westerly and south-westerly over a large part of the province, and hence on the 14th and 15th the rainfall was lighter and rather more local. Pressure, however, began to fall slowly on the 15th, and the fall became more rapid on the 16th, when it became below the normal, so that from this date conditions were again becoming favourable for another large advance of monsoon winds from the Bay over Bengal, and rainfall again became decidedly heavier and more general. The fall of pressure continued on the 17th, and pressure became below the normal by from a seventh to an eighth of an inch at many of the central, eastern and northern stations of Bengal, while over the Bay pressure was normal. Hence, baric gradients were very steep and a strong monsoon current flowed in from the Bay towards the low-pressure area in Bengal. On the 18th the low-pressure area had drifted in a westerly direction and its centre was near Bankura, and round the depression there was a very distinct cyclonic circulation of winds, indications of which had also existed on the 17th. On the 19th, the depression had again passed away in a westerly direction into the North-West Provinces, but baric gradients over Bengal and over the Bay continued very steep, and the monsoon conditions in Bengal were still strongly developed. On the 20th and 21st pressure again fell rapidly in Bengal, and became about a fifth of an inch below the normal, and a feeble form of depression with a circulation of winds round it existed in South and South-West Bengal. On the 22nd this area of low pressure was moving in a westerly direction, and its centre was in the extreme west of Bengal, while on the 23rd it had moved away from the province, and pressure rose in Bengal by amounts ranging up to about a fifth of an inch, while the rapid increase of pressure continued on the 24th, and also to a great extent on the 25th and 26th. Moderate to heavy rain, therefore, continued almost daily, and at almost all stations, up to and including the 24th instant; but with the continued and decidedly rapid increase of pressure, the monsoon current began to fall off in strength and from the 24th, rainfall became much lighter and more local, and indeed over a large part of Bihár and Chota Nagpur the falls almost ceased.

On the 26th the distribution of pressure had become decidedly unusual, as pressure was very considerably in excess of the normal at the northern and north-western stations, and comparatively low pressures were reported over the south-western districts and the head of the Bay. On the 27th pressure was falling in the north-west angle of the Bay, and rising elsewhere, so that the barometric depression had became more clearly marked over the head of the Bay, while the cyclonic circulation of winds accompanying it had became more definite. On the 28th, the feeble depression appeared to be come again more pronounced, and it was accompanied by a very perfect cyclonic circulation of winds, the centre of which was off the Orissa coast, and though the winds near the centre of the depression were feeble, yet strong winds were reported to the east and south of it. On the 29th the small depression was rather nearer to the Orissa Coast, but had probably diminished in intensity, while on the 30th it had passed over Orissa and either existed in a very feeble form in the extreme south of Chota Nagpur, or more probably had entirely broken up. The depression as it passed inland was so feeble that it brought up comparatively little rainfall, and the monsoon current following in its rear was exceedingly feeble. During the whole period of the existence of this feeble whirl in the north-west angle of the Bay, the monsoon current was more or less deflected from Bengal towards it, and hence the rainfall over Bengal for the period from the 24th to the 30th was comparatively light and local, and all Divisions showed falls very considerably in defect, while again even when the small depression had passed inland on the 31st, the rainfall was comparatively light, the western and south-western districts receiving little or no rain, while the falls were also light over the remainder of the province.

Hence it will be seen that the conditions in Bengal during July were for the greater part of the period very favourable for good and heavy general rainfall. One very pronounced barometric depression, which indeed might almost be classed as a feeble cyclonic storm, formed in the Bay in the early part of the month, crossing the coast near Balasore on the 10th, and moving in a westerly direction, and also bringing up a very heavy wave of rainfall. Two feeble land-formed barometric depressions passed through the province in the middle of the month and also gave very heavy rain, while another very feeble depression was formed in the last week of the month in the north-west angle of the Bay, which passed across Orissa, but brought up little rain in its rear. The rainfall during July, however, appears to have been mainly deflected towards the north and north-east of the province, and North Bengal has received exceptionally heavy rainfall, the fall being 68 per cent. in excess of the normal. North Bihár has also received a fall larger than usual, but in all other Divisions tha falls have been below the normal, the defect being very small in South Bihár and Chota Nagpur, and moderate in East and South-West Bengal and Orissa.

Pressure.—The variations of pressure during the month have been exceptionally large, and have already been referred to in the previous summary. For the whole month the mean pressure of Bengal has been in defect of the normal usually by from two to four hundredths of an inch. The defects appear to be smallest in East and North Bengal, and largest in South Bihár and Chota Nagpur. In Assam there has been a general defect of 0·033 inch but, as in previous months, the largest defect is reported from Sibsagar, where it has equalled 0·06 inch. The remaining variations of the mean pressure from the normal do not call for any detailed remarks.

Temperature.—The variations of temperature during the month have been unimportant, and in all Divisions the mean temperature for the month has been very nearly normal. A slight excess temperature of a tenth of a degree is reported from South-West Bengal, while in Orissa and Chota Nagpur temperatures have been quite normal; but with these exceptions all Divisions show defective temperatures; the defects in East Bengal and South Bihár only equal a tenth of a degree, but in North Bengal and North Bihár they slightly exceed half a degree. For the whole month the mean temperature of Bengal has been only 0·2° in defect of the normal. In Assam the defect is larger than this, and it has equalled 0·8°, the largest defect being reported from Dhubri, where it has equalled 2·2°, while at Silchar and Sibsagar almost normal temperatures have been reported.

Rainfall.—The excessive average rainfall of 23·61 inches has occurred in North Bengal, which represents nearly ten inches more than usual, and North Bihár has also received thirteen inches, or about an inch in excess of the normal. East Bengal has received an average fall of fourteen and a third inches, which is two and a quarter inches in defect; and South Bihár and Chota Nagpur have received about twelve inches of rain, the fall in each case being very slightly less than usual. The smallest falls are recorded in South-West Bengal and Orissa, and these average about ten and a half inches, or one and two inches, respectively, below the normal amounts. It should, however, be remarked that though only two Divisions show excess falls, the number of rainy days in July has been larger than usual in all Divisions except Chota Nagpur, Orissa, and South-West Bengal. This would tend to show that the actual falls of rain have been generally lighter than usual.

The comparison of the actual rainfall of the seven meteorological divisions of the province with the normal is most accurately shown in the form of a percentage. The figures representing the rainfall for the month calculated in this way are included in the table below under the heading of July. This table gives a condensed summary of the rainfall statistics of the present year up to date for each Division, the first seven columns giving the actual rainfall in each month expressed as a percentage of the normal, while the eighth column shows the actual rainfall for the first seven months expressed as a percentage of the normal for the same period. It will be seen that in July the rainfall has been fairly abundant in all Divisions except perhaps Orissa and East Bengal, while exceptionally heavy falls have occurred in North Bengal. In Orissa, however, the deficiency in July has followed a very large excess in June, and hence is probably not very important. In East Bengal the moderate deficiency of July has also followed a considerable deficiency in June, though excess falls were received in April and May. Taking the rainfall of the year into consideration, it will be seen that all the Divisions except North Bihár and North Bengal have received falls less than the normal amounts, the defects being most marked in South-West Bengal, South Bihár and Orissa, and being very small in East Bengal and Chota Nagpur. North Bihár has received a normal fall and North Bengal a fall 24 per cent. in excess of the normal amount for the seven months.

The actual falls of rain in the province have varied very largely: Buxa, in the Darjeeling district, has received 82·09 inches in July, and falls exceeding fifty inches are reported at Jalpaiguri, Alipore Dooar, Bhogatpur, and Kurseong, all in and near the hills of North Bengal; while on the other hand Sikroul in the Shahabad district reports only 4·43 inches, Chuadanga only 5·07 inches, and Shergati in the Gaya district only 5·18 inches, while many stations in Bihar, Chota Nagpur, Orissa, and South-West Bengal, and some in parts of East Bengal, have received less than ten inches.

The excessive rainfall has thus been determined towards the line of the hills, and an excess fall of 34 inches is reported at Buxa, one of 37 inches at Jalpaiguri, and one of 35 inches at Bagdora, while on the other hand a considerable part of the centre, south and south-east of the province shows a defective fall generally exceeding two inches, and in some cases exceeding five inches, defects exceeding the latter amount being shown in considerable parts of the districts of Chittagong, Dacca, Cuttack, Balasore, Midnapur and small parts of Bankura, Burdwan, Nadia, Saran, Rajshahi, Backergunge, and Mymensingh.

The following table gives full data for the comparison of the actual and normal rainfall of the month of July in all districts of the province. The figures are derived from the average and actual rainfall of the rain-recording stations in each district, due allowance being made for the area which each station represents. This gives a more accurate average than the arithmetical means given in the weekly and monthly meteorological tables. The first column gives the normal or average district rainfall as determined from the rainfall observations of the past fifteen years. The second column gives the actual district rainfall as determined from the weighted actual rainfalls of the month at the reporting stations in each district. The third column expresses the ratio of the actual district rainfall of the past month to the normal rainfall as a percentage, and the fourth column gives the same information in a slightly different form, expressing as a percentage how much the district rainfall varied in excess or in defect from the normal rainfall :—

The mean pressure, temperature, &c., are deduced from the traces of the Barograph and Thermograph and from observations made at 6h, 10h, 16h and 22h.

The maximum and minimum temperatures are obtained from self-registering thermometers. All the thermometers are verified, and the readings have been corrected to a standard constructed and verified at the Kew Observatory. They are exposed under a thatched shed open at the sides, and are suspended four feet above the ground.

The barometer readings are corrected approximately to those of the standard, Newman's No. 86, formerly at the Surveyor-General's Office.

The hygrometric elements are obtained from Tables III, IV, and V of the official tables computed in the Meteorological Office, and based on Regnault's modifications of August's formula.

The directions and the movement of the wind are taken from the trace of a Beckley's anemograph.

The mouth of the rain-gauge is one foot above the ground.

Explanation.—Summary.—The normal means of air pressure and temperature are the arithmetical average or means of the reading during the same period. The humidity of the atmosphere is expressed at percentage, saturated air being presented by 100. A clear sky is denoted by 0 and an overcast sky by 10. For rainfall the normal mean are the numerical means or average of the rainfall in that district determined from the returns sent in by the subdivisional station district, i.e., from total rainfall at the subdivisional stations in the district sending in returns divided by the number of stations. A rainy day is one on for the week ending Saturday, the 13th of August 1892.

Explanation.—... indicates that no rain has fallen. If the return for any day has not been received, the corresponding space is left blank. If any of the returns are wanting, the corresponding spaces in the total rainfall columns are left blank. With reference to the column of rainy days, the definition of a rainy day is when at least 0·1 inch of rain has fallen.

CALCUTTA, the 16th August 1892.

SUMMARY OF THE METEOROLOGICAL AND RAINFALL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN BENGAL, AND OF THE METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN ASSAM, FOR THE WEEK ENDING 8 A.M., SATURDAY, THE 13TH OF AUGUST 1892.

At the close of the previous week the distribution of pressure had become decidedly unusual, and pressure was generally in excess of the normal by amounts ranging up to a seventh of an inch in the east of the province. Hence the monsoon current was only flowing partially over Bengal, and conditions were becoming favourable for a partial break in the rains. On the 7th, or the first day of the week under review, pressure continued to rise moderately to rapidly, the rise being largest at the central and western stations, and pressure became above the normal by from a sixth to a tenth of an inch. Rainfall was thus to a great extent absent in South-West Bengal and over parts of North Bengal and Chota Nagpur, but over the remaining districts it was fairly general. On the 8th a slight general increase of pressure again occurred, which was continued on the 9th and 10th, and the average excess pressure over the province became equal to at least an eighth of an inch. The falls of rain from the 8th to the 10th were hence generally light, and very local, and in many districts almost absent, particularly in Orissa, South-West Bengal, and Chota Nagpur, and over considerable parts of East and North Bengal and South Bihár; but on the 10th heavy rain commenced in the west of Bihár, falls of from two to four inches being reported at a good many stations. On the 11th a slight fall of pressure commenced, which continued on the 12th, though a slight rise was again reported on the 13th, and even up to the close of the week pressure was rather largely in excess of the normal. The seat of maximum excess, however, towards the close of the week had moved from the east into the centre of the province, and on the 13th at Burdwan an excess of 0·14″ was recorded. Hence conditions continued unfavourable for any large advance of the monsoon current over Orissa, South-West Bengal, and Chota Nagpur, quite up to the close of the week, and hence rainfall in these districts continued light and local. The heavy rainfall, however, which commenced on the 10th in the west of Bihár gradually spread over the whole of that district and along the line of the hills into North Bengal, while also moderate rain was received in East Bengal, and during the last two or three days of the week some exceptionally heavy falls were recorded. Thus the whole district of Jalpaiguri reported an average fall of from 5 to 6 inches on the 12th, and the Kuch Bihar district received a general fall of nearly 5 inches on the same day.

It will hence be seen that a partial break in the rains has obtained over a considerable part of the south-west of the province for practically the whole week, though in the north and north-west of the province heavy rain has been received during the latter half, and that even up to the close of the week the distribution of barometric pressure over the province remained very decidedly unfavourable for any further immediate general and heavy advance of the monsoon current over Bengal, and the conditions indeed indicated the probability of the extension of the area affected by the break in the rains, rather than that it would contract.

Pressure.—The mean pressure for the week has been largely in excess of the normal, and the excess has equalled more than a tenth of an inch at almost all stations. The smallest excess has generally been in South Bihár, where it has not averaged much more than 0·1″, and it has been largest at the stations in South-West Bengal, where it averages about 0·14″, and it is actually largest at Krishnaghur, where it equals 0·155″. In Assam also pressure has been in excess of the normal, the excess at Dhubri and Silchar equalling 0·12″, while at Sibsagar it only equals 0·058″s.

Temperature.—The mean temperature for the week has been below the normal in all districts, except Orissa, Chota Nagpur, and South-West Bengal, where either normal temperature or very slight excess has been registered. In East Bengal the defect has been small and has been less than half a degree, but in North Bengal and South Bihár it has been between one and two degrees, and in North Bihár it has equalled 2·2°, so that the mean temperature for the whole province has equalled 0·7° below the normal. In Assam also the defect has been rather considerable, and it equals 1·7°.

Rainfall.—As has been previously stated, rainfall has been exceptionally heavy in the north of the province, and North Bengal and North Bihár have received average falls of between five and six inches, the fall in North Bengal being 2·31 inches in excess of the usual amount, and in North Bihár 3·10 inches in excess. The falls in South Bihár have also been fairly heavy, and this district has received 3 23 inches, or nearly an inch more than usual.

All the other Divisions of the province have shown large defects. East Bengal has recorded an average fall of 2·25 inches, or more than an inch and-a-half in defect Chota Nagpur has only received 1·25. inches or 1·58 inches less than the normal, and the falls in Orissa and South-West Bengal have only averaged about four-fifths of an inch, or about a quarter of the normal fall in each case.

Taking up the case of the smaller districts, the following have received exceptionally heavy falls of rain during the week :—Jalpaiguri, Kuch Bihar, Darjeeling, Purnea, Bhágalpur, Muzaffarpur, Champaran, Saran, Gaya, Patna, and Monghyr; while on the other hand exceedingly scanty falls have been received in Puri, Cuttack, Balasore, Midnapore, 24-Parganas, Howrah, Hooghly, Nadia, Burdwan, Bankura, Birbhum, Murshidabad, Pabna, Chittagong, Singhbhum and Manbhum.

The following table gives the summary of the temperature and rainfall data of each of the seven meteorological divisions of the province for the week ending Saturday, the 13th of August 1892:—

REVISED ADVERTISEMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first five volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source; history; properties and uses (both chemical and industrial); trade statistics; markets; &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributors have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries and confirmed the vernacular names, so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal octavo pages; Vol. II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Vol. III contains the letters D, E, F and half of G.

Vol. IV latter half of G to middle of L; and Vol. V contains the latter half of L to end of "O." The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in seven volumes during the current year; but an eighth volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary. The Index will practically be a Glossary of the vernacular and European names of the plants, animals and minerals of India, and as such will be a work of reference, which, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The period of registration of subscribers' names having expired on the 1st October, the price will in future be in India Rs. 45 and in England 3 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set (exclusive of the Index, for which a separate charge will be made). An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England, at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, Rs. 6 and 8 shillings respectively will be charged extra for the whole sets.

No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately.

5. All acts of executive authority, proceedings, decrees and sentences which have been done, taken or passed in or with respect to the said estate of Porahat since the beginning of the year 1858, and before the commencement of this Act, by any officer of the Government or by any person acting under his authority or otherwise in pursuance of an order of the Government, or which have been or shall be ratified by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, shall be deemed to have been done, taken and passed in accordance with law; and no suit and other proceeding shall be maintained or continued against any person whatever on the ground that any such acts, proceedings, decrees or sentences were not done, taken or passed in accordance with law.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

THE estate of Porahat, adjoining the Singhbhum District, was confiscated in the year 1858, and, being a tract of little importance, has hitherto, without being formally made subject to the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal, been informally administered by the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum.

The Hon'ble Sir Charles Elliott was of opinion that the tract should be formally attached to the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal. A proclamation under the Statute 28 & 29 Vict., c. 17, s. 4, has accordingly been issued.

His Honour is now of opinion that the further step should be taken of applying to the tract provisions similar to those enacted in Part I of the Jhansi and Morar Act, 1886 The Government of India, concurring in this opinion, has directed the preparation and introduction of this Bill.

LABORATORY IN CONNECTION WITH THE NEW REPTILE-HOUSE IN THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDEN, CALCUTTA.

THE following correspondence has been forwarded to Government and is published for general information.

W. MAUDE,
Offg. Secy. to the Government of Bengal.

Dated Calcutta, the 8th August 1892.

From—BABU JOY GOBIND LAW,
To—HON'BLE H. H. RISLEY.

IT has been mentioned to me that a proposal to start in the Zoological Garden a Laboratory for investigating the action of snake-poison and the efficacy of alleged remedies, is now in abeyance for want of funds. As it appears to me that the scheme is one of universal importance, and of special interest to my countrymen, as promising to advance scientific knowledge, with a view to discovery of a remedy for the deadly poison, I have much pleasure in offering the Committee the sum of Rs. 15,000, which I understand will be sufficient to provide a building and fit it with the requisite appliances on a suitable scale.

Dated Calcutta, the 13th August 1892.

From—D. D. CUNNINGHAM, Esq., for Honorary Secy., Zoological Garden, Calcutta, To—BABU JOY GOBIND LAW.

I AM desired by the Committee of Management of the Garden to inform you that your letter of the 8th August, to Mr. Risley, in which you offer to contribute the sum of Rs. 15,000 to provide for the construction of a Laboratory in connection with the new Reptile-house, was submitted to them at their meeting held on Thursday morning, the 11th August, and to convey to you their warm thanks for your generous help to the garden.

Note by Colonel J. M. McNeile, R.E., Chief Engineer, Bengal, dated 21st December 1891, on the proposed alteration in measurement of canal boats, rates, &c.
Letter from Honorary Secretary, Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, dated 3rd March 1892.

THE question of the rates of tolls levied by Government on boats using the Circular and Eastern Canals, the system of measurement in force, and the revenue derived from the canals, which formed the subject of an enquiry by a specially-appointed Committee in 1884, was again brought to the notice of Government in a memorial presented to the then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal by the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce on the 17th November 1887.

2. The memorialists, who are merchants having extensive commercial dealings with the eastern districts of Bengal, asserted that the traffic passing along the canals was subjected to very onerous taxation by the heavy tolls in force, and went on to give statements showing the rates of tolls at present in force, and the changes in them which had been made in past years. They quoted figures showing the receipts and working expenses of the canals, arguing that, as the canals were shown to be highly remunerative, and the gross receipts since they were taken over by Government had largely exceeded the original cost, all necessity for the levy of tolls had disappeared. They therefore prayed that, since it might not, in view of future improvements to the canals, be deemed expedient to abolish the tolls altogether, the rates of tolls should be reduced to 8 annas per 100 maunds. The memorialists next brought forward, as their principal ground of complaint, the existing system of measuring boats, giving figures, compiled from the books of several mercantile firms, to show the incidence of the tolls charged on the weight of goods actually carried, the substance of the complaint being that toll was charged on a gross displacement, arrived at by an arbitrary system of measurement, largely in excess of the weight of the cargo actually carried. On these grounds they prayed for the abolition of the existing system of measurement, and the substitution of a reduced toll, levied on the actual weight of the cargo carried.

3. In regard to these complaints, a Commission was appointed by Government of Bengal Public Works Department Resolution No. 238*I.*, dated 11th February 1890, to enquire into the system of measurements and incidence of tolls charged under the existing rules and notifications.

The recommendations of this Commission are briefly as follows:—

I. That no new system of measurement could be devised which would ensure greater accuracy in the calculation of gross tonnage than is attained under the existing system. Differential rates were, however, recommended for square-built boats and those of the ordinary native type.

II. That tolls should be assessed on the basis of the weight of cargo actually carried, i.e., the net tonnage of the boats, to be arrived at by halving the gross tonnage as calculated under the existing rules.

III. The incidence of the rates of toll in force on the value of the goods carried did not appear to the Commission to be so high as to justify any reduction.

IV. That tolls should be re-imposed on return trip cargoes, and a reduction of 2 annas made on the existing rates of 14 annas and 12 annas.

V. The Commission rejected as impracticable a proposal which had been made by Babu Sita Nath Roy, Honorary Secretary of the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, and one of the Members of the Commission, that tolls should be levied on the basis of the cháláns carried by the boats.

A note of dissent by Babu Sita Nath Roy accompanied the report of the Commission, in which he recorded his opinion that the proportion of net to gross tonnage should be taken as somewhat less than $\frac{1}{2}$, and recommended that tolls should be levied on the basis of the mahájan's cháláns accompanying the boats. He further urged, with regard to recommendation III of the Commission, that a general reduction of the rates of toll to 8 annas per 100 maunds should be granted, on the ground of the large excess, which he calculated to amount to 72$\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs of rupees, of the gross receipts from the canals over the working expenses and capital outlay. Herein he reiterates, with considerable amplifications, the argument brought forward in the memorial referred to in paragraph 2 above.

3. A note by Colonel McNeile, R.E., Chief Engineer, dated 21st December 1891, containing proposals for the alteration of the existing system, was forwarded to the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, and elicited a second communication from that body, reviewing the proposals made in the note, and containing a request for a reduction of the rates of toll on certain specified articles, and again bringing forward, as the chief ground for the reductions proposed, the large profit yearly made from the canals.

4. In view of the oft-repeated argument that the large annual profit derived from these canals justifies a reduction in the rates of toll, the Lieutenant-Governor considers it advisable that the position of the canals as regards revenue and capital expenditure should be clearly explained. The capital expenditure on the canal up to the end of the financial year 1890-91 was Rs. 52,32,872. The revenue of the year under all heads was Rs. 5,25,146 and the expenditure Rs. 3,24,018, leaving a net revenue of Rs. 2,01,128, equivalent to a return of slightly less than 4 per cent. on the capital value of the work. This return is no more than what would be expected from a Productive Public Work. The tolls realised are sufficient, and not more than sufficient, to pay interest at the rate usually paid by Government on borrowed capital. In the case of Productive Works, whether Canals or Railways, the source from which the capital was derived, whether provided from revenue or raised by loan, does not affect the question, as both sources are alike derived, in the long run, from taxation. Still less does the fact that larger profits were realized years ago affect the question. Some of the Madras canals have completely recouped the Government for the original expenditure on their construction, but it has never been contended that the water-rate or the navigation charges should be lowered on this account. Under these circumstances, the Lieutenant-Governor wishes it to be distinctly understood that the gross revenue derived from the canals has to cover, not only the expenses of maintenance, but also a fair rate of interest on their capital outlay, and that consequently no request for a reduction of toll involving the non-payment of interest on the capital expended can be entertained. On the contrary, in view of the desirability of effecting certain much-needed improvements in the Bhangore khal and other places where the navigation is difficult, it is to the interest of all who are in any way concerned with the traffic on the canals that the receipts should be increased. There is at present an estimate, amounting to Rs. 20,702, debitable to Capital, awaiting sanction for a much-needed improvement to the tow-path.

5. As regards the proposal made by Babu Sita Nath Roy that tolls should be levied on the basis of the cháláns carried by the boatmen, the Lieutenant-Governor notices, in passing, that the boatmen concerned are stated by the author of this suggestion to be mainly low class Muhammadans, who would have no difficulty in adding to the cargo en route, and that, as a matter of fact, on the Midnapore Canal, the displacement of, and weight of cargo carried by, boats are found to vary as the boats proceed along the canal. It has never been suggested that goods sent by railway should not be weighed, but that freight should be charged on the weight stated in the invoices of the consignors. The Lieutenant-Governor altogether disapproves the proposal, and accepts the recommendation of the majority of the Commission rejecting it.

6. The principal complaint set forth in the memorial presented by the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce in November 1887 was that the tonnage on which toll is levied is largely in excess of the actual weight of cargo carried. The tolls are in fact calculated on a rough formula intended to give approximately the weight of water displaced by the boat, the result being, on the average of a large number of actual measurements of ordinary country-built boats, approximately double the weight of the cargo on board. The Lieutenant-Governor recognises the desirability of adopting a system of measurement by which the weight charged shall more nearly approximate to that carried, and accepts the view of the Commission in this respect. In future, the length of the boat will, in calculating the maundage, be taken as one-quarter of the actual length instead of, as at present, one-half. It must, however, be borne in mind that, as stated in paragraph 4 above, no reduction of the gross receipts from the canals is admissible, and this consideration renders it necessary to double all the existing rates of toll. Practically no reduction in the amount of toll paid on any boat is made by the above alteration in the system of measurement, its object being solely to introduce a more accurate rule for calculating the tonnage on which toll is levied; the tolls will, as a fact, owing to the omission of fractions of feet, be very slightly diminished.

7. The Lieutenant-Governor admits the correctness of the Committee's recommendation that differential rates should be levied on square-built boats. They, however, form less than one per cent. of the traffic, and it is not worth-while to vary the rules for the purpose of surcharging so small a number of boats.

8. Passing on to the incidence of the existing toll-rates on the value of the goods carried, which was one of the points towards which the investigations of the Commission were directed, and in regard to which a request was preferred by the Chamber of Commerce in their communication, dated 3rd March 1892, for reductions of the rates of toll on certain specified articles, the Lieutenant-Governor, while willing to grant such concessions in this respect as appear reasonable, cannot, for the reasons stated above, permit them to involve any reduction of the gross revenue derived from the canals.

9. It has been found that boats are now usually able to obtain cargo for the return journey; hitherto for such journeys no tolls have been charged provided the boat did not pass out of the canal into the river. It appears, however, to be equitable to require goods carried on the canals to the interior to pay a toll instead of imposing the whole burden on goods consigned to Calcutta. At one time tolls were charged at 6 annas per 100 maunds on loaded boats only, and the collections averaged Rs. 16,000 a year; now there are few if any empty boats, and a toll of 6 annas, which it is proposed to impose on all boats, will, it is expected, contribute Rs. 50,000 a year to the receipts. The former toll was abandoned chiefly on account of the difficulty of distinguishing between full and empty boats, which will not now arise as it is proposed to charge all boats full and empty.

10. In paragraph 3 of their report the Committee dealt with the incidence of canal rates on the value of goods, and gave full particulars of the varying percentages. From these it appears that the only goods which pay more than 1 per cent. on their value are lime, hay and straw, and firewood. The tolls on firewood and lime are, respectively, 5 and 2·5 per cent. on their value. On rice the percentage does not exceed ·67 per cent., but a reduction on the tolls in this staple is strongly urged by the Secretary to the National Chamber of Commerce. On hay and straw the percentage is about 3 per cent., but the cargoes are very bulky, and from this point of view the toll is not heavy.

11. After careful consideration it has therefore been decided to grant a reduction of the existing rate on rice from 14 annas to 12 annas per 100 maunds, and on lime and firewood from 14 annas and 12 annas, respectively, to 8 annas per 100 maunds. All the rates mentioned above in this paragraph have reference to the existing system of measurement: under the new system these amounts will, of course, be doubled.

12. The effect of the reductions in toll mentioned above will, it is expected, be to lessen the average tolls received yearly by Rs. 45,000; the tolls on return boats mentioned in the preceding paragraph are calculated to produce Rs. 50,000, so that there should be an increased profit of Rs. 5,000 a year resulting from the changes now sanctioned. There is, however, much uncertainty as to the sum which will be realized from the tolls on boats proceeding eastward. As before mentioned, the actual receipts did not, when they were levied, exceed Rs. 16,000, and the Lieutenant-Governor is therefore not in a position to allow further reductions. It is in fact doubtful whether the diminution in the receipts, which can only be calculated approximately, will be covered by the tolls now re-imposed. The net receipts are at present only just sufficient to cover interest and working expenses, and the reductions granted are the utmost which can be allowed without risk of the net income being diminished. The collection of tolls on boats proceeding eastward will, owing to the increased number of boats requiring to be measured, add to the working expenses of the canals by, it is estimated, Rs. 4,000 yearly.

13. The alterations sanctioned in this and the preceding paragraph will have effect from the 1st of April 1893.

14. Babu Sita Nath Roy, who since the Committee sat has been in frequent communication with Government regarding the changes in the rates of toll determined on, has recently appealed to the Lieutenant-Governor to reduce the rate of toll on salt, on which 14 annas per 100 maunds is now levied, by two annas. The incidence of the present toll is ·52 per cent. on the value of the article itself. Recognising Babu Sita Nath Roy as the exponent of the views of a considerable section of the mercantile community, His Honour was disposed to accede to this request, but the loss in revenue which would be entailed by this reduction would amount to rather more than Rs. 5,000 yearly. It has been shown in paragraph 12 above that the effect of the measures now sanctioned is to leave a margin of Rs. 1,000 only in favour of the canals, and the Lieutenant-Governor is therefore unable to sanction the proposed alteration. If the sum derived from the return tolls is such as to admit of the reduction being made without lessening the net profits now derived from the canals, the matter will be reconsidered, but it will be necessary to wait a year at least to collect information on which a decision can be based.

15. The return toll will in the long run no doubt fall on the consumer, but there are grounds for believing that the boatmen will in the first instance suffer. They complain at present of the excessive time during which boats are detained by the mahájans for the purpose of unloading, a direct result, they state, of the rules regarding demurrage. The time allowed for unloading was fixed when the canal between Dhappa and Chitpore was tidal and work could only be carried on for a few hours a day; now the water is always high and approximately at the same level; there need therefore be no delay in unloading and discharging the boats. The measurement of boats having been halved, the number of days during which they will be allowed to remain in the canal without extra charge will, under the rules now in force, be reduced, and no change will be made to obviate this contingency, which, it is reported, will be regarded by the boatmen as some compensation for the return tolls to be levied.

16. The report of the Committee is full and complete, and is the result of much patient enquiry and laborious investigation. The thanks of the Lieutenant-Governor are due to Lieutenant-Colonel A D. McArthur, R.E., the President, and to Mr W. C. Boyce and Babu Sita Nath Roy, Members, for their services and for the clear report submitted.

I. ORDER.—Ordered, that a copy of this Resolution be published in the Calcutta Gazette for general information.

II. Ordered also, that a copy be forwarded to the Superintending Engineer, South-Western Circle; the Honorary Secretary to the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce; the Manager, and the District Traffic Superintendent, Eastern Bengal State Railway; the Agent, Bengal Central Railway; the Judicial, Revenue, and Financial Departments of this Government; the Board of Revenue, Lower Provinces; the Commissioner of the Presidency Division; and the Examiner of Public Works Accounts, Bengal, for information.

III. Ordered also, that a copy be forwarded to Lieutenant-Colonel A. D. McArthur, R.E., Mr. W. C. Boyce, and Babu Sita Nath Roy with reference to paragraph 16.

Explanation.—... indicates that no rain has fallen. If the return for any day has not been received, the corresponding space is left blank. If any of the returns are wanting, the corresponding spaces in the total rainfall columns are left blank. With reference to the column of rainy days, the definition of a rainy day is when at least 0·1 inch of rain has fallen.

Calcutta, the 23rd August 1892.

SUMMARY OF THE METEOROLOGICAL AND RAINFALL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN BENGAL, AND OF THE METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS TAKEN IN ASSAM, FOR THE WEEK ENDING 8 A.M., SATURDAY, THE 20TH OF AUGUST 1892.

A PARTIAL break in the rains had obtained over a considerable part of the south-west of the province for almost the whole of the previous week, though in the northern and north-western districts heavy rain had been received during the second half of it. Even up to quite the close of that week pressure remained largely in excess of the normal over the whole of Bengal, and the seat of maximum excess was in the centre of the province, and hence the monsoon current flowing from the Bay was decidedly lighter than usual, and the prospects of heavy general rain were very unfavourable. On the 14th and 15th, however, pressure fell slowly, but even on the latter date the general pressure was quite a tenth of an inch in excess of the normal. A slight rise then set in on the 16th, and on the 17th pressure had risen generally over the eastern half of the province and fallen slowly at the western stations, and was again largely in excess. This was followed on the 18th by a rapid fall of pressure over the whole province, the fall averaging nearly 0·08″, and at some stations equalling a tenth of an inch, and hence on this date the distribution of pressure became much more normal than it had been for some time. This fall continued on the 19th and also on the 20th at almost all stations, and hence at the close of the week pressure had become below the normal by amounts averaging from 0·03″ to 0·04″. Thus again during the greater part of the week under review conditions have remained unfavourable for any large extension of the monsoon current over the major part of the province, and light local rainfall only was reported in practically all districts except in the north of the province; but here again, as in the previous week, moderately heavy rain has been received. Towards the close of the week when a more normal distribution of pressure became established, the monsoon current appeared to have commenced to flow more freely over the province, and on the 20th, or the last day of the week, rainfall was much more general than it had been, and the partial break in the rains appeared practically at an end, but the falls even on this day were in most districts rather light and decidedly irregularly distributed. Hence the general rainfall for the province for the week has not been much more than a half or three-fifths of the usual quantity, and indeed in such divisions as Orissa and East Bengal it has been only about one-third of the normal quantity, and in South-West Bengal, South Bihár, and Chota Nagpur the fall has been about one-half the usual amount. On the other hand, North Bengal has received a normal fall, and North Bihár about one and-a-half times as much as usual.

Pressure.—Owing to the continued high pressure of the earlier part of the week, the mean pressure for the period has been rather largely in excess of the normal, the general excess equalling from 0·04″ to 0·06.″ This excess has been largest in the western and south-western districts, where it averages 0·06″ and smallest in the east of the province, and in Assam the general excess only averages 0 024," while at Sibsagar pressure is almost normal.

Temperature.—Owing to the comparative absence of rainfall, temperature during the week has been rather largely above the normal over a large part of the province, the mean temperature in Orissa, South-West and East Bengal and Chota Nagpur being from about one and-a-half to two degrees in excess Temperature in South Bihár and North Bengal has been about normal, though very slightly above it, and in North Bihár very slightly below it. For the whole of Bengal the mean temperature for the week has been practically one degree in excess of the normal. In Assam a small defect of 0·3° is recorded.

Rainfall.—Heavy and fairly continuous rain has been received during the week in North Bihár, which has averaged three and-a-half inches, or an inch and-a-quarter more than usual. North Bengal has also received heavy rain, and has averaged two and-a-half inches, or practically a normal fall. In all other divisions the falls have been decidedly small, and have varied between an inch and an inch and-a-half in East and South-West Bengal, South Bihár and Chota Nagpur, while in Orissa the fall has only averaged 0 86 inch. In South Bihár the amount in defect is 1·36 inches, but in the remaining districts the defects average nearly two inches. Expressed as a percentage of the normal fall for the week, the rainfall in the various divisions has averaged as follows :—Orissa 33 per cent., South-West Bengal 42 per cent., North Bengal 97 per cent., East Bengal 33 per cent., North Bihár 158 per cent., South Bihár 48 per cent., and Chota Nagpur 46 per cent.

These figures, however, do not fully indicate the extreme lightness of the falls in some of the smaller districts of the province, and the falls have been extremely defective in the following districts :—Cuttack, Balasore, Midnapore, 24-Parganas, Howrah (where practically no rain has fallen), Hooghly, Jessore, Bankura, Birbhum, Patna, Tippera, parts of Gaya and Southal Parganas, and Singhbhum.

The following table gives the summary of the temperature and rainfall data of each of the seven meteorological divisions of the province for the week ending Saturday, the 20th of August 1892:—

The mean pressure, temperature, &c., are deduced from the traces of the Barograph and Thermograph and from observations made at 6h, 10h, 16h and 22h.

The maximum and minimum temperatures are obtained from self-registering thermometers. All the thermometers are verified, and the readings have been corrected to a standard constructed and verified at the Kew Observatory. They are exposed under a thatched shed open at the sides, and are suspended four feet above the ground.

The barometer readings are corrected approximately to those of the standard, Newman's No. 86, formerly at the Surveyor-General's Office.

The hygrometric elements are obtained from Tables III, IV, and V of the official tables computed in the Meteorological Office, and based on Regnault's modifications of August's formula.

The directions and the movement of the wind are taken from the trace of a Beckley's anemograph.

The mouth of the rain-gauge is one foot above the ground.

REVIEW OF THE REGISTRATION OF VITAL STATISTICS IN BENGAL FOR THE MONTH OF APRIL 1892.

Districts.

Births.—The total number of births registered during April 1892 in the forty-six districts of Bengal (excluding Darjeeling, from which complete returns have not yet been received) was 156,533 against 205,562 in the preceding month, showing an annual ratio of 26·76 against 35·16 per 1,000 of the aggregate population of those districts, which is 70,144,953. The birth-rate of April 1892 is thus 8·40 less than of that the preceding month.

Births according to Sex.—Of the total births, 81,858 were males, and 74,675 females; the proportion being 109 of the former to every 100 of the latter.

Mortality.—The total number of deaths (exclusive of still-births) registered in the Province during the month under review, amounted to 207,116 against 254,818 in the preceding month; the annual ratios corresponding to 35·28 and 43·44, respectively, per 1,000 of the aggregate population. The death-rate of April 1892 is 11·04 higher than the mean rate of the corresponding month of the past five years, 1887—91, and is also higher than the rate of the corresponding month of any of the past five years, vide figures below :—
